FINAL CONDEMNATION OF JUDAS ISCARIOT

Also Described in the New Found Gospel—The Actual Words of Divine Unknown Language Given.

New York, July 12.—(Special.)—Egypt's treasures in the way of ancient manuscripts relating to early Christianity are inexhaustible.

The latest to be laid before the world are presented in a volume which has just been printed by order of the trustees of the British museum and which contains the texts and translations of a series of ancient Coptic manuscripts.

Legends Hitherto Unknown.

These manuscripts are of exceptional interest and importance. They record traditions and legends hitherto unknown, many of which must be very old. They are of unusual importance, from a palaeographic point of view, for three out of the four are dated and thus form guides for the approximate dating of undated manuscripts.

The volume contains an important series of Apocrypha, a life of Pisentius, Bishop of Coptos in the seventh century, an encomium on John the Baptist attributed to Saint John Chrysostom, and a series of instructions by Pachomius, the Archimandrite.

All are written in the dialect of upper Egypt, and all are published for the first time.

The book was prepared by E. A. Wallis Budge, keeper of the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities in the British museum, and the editing of the texts was carried out by an arrangement with Dr. L. D. Barnett, keeper of the department of Oriental printed books and manuscripts. The Coptic text is given together with translations. There are also many plates showing pages of the original manuscripts.

The Book of the Resurrection.

The longest and perhaps most interesting Apocryphon is the "Book of the Resurrection," which is attributed to Bartholomew, the apostle. It describes the descent of Jesus into hell, the conquest of death and his sons, the defeat of the devil, the destruction of the gates, bolts and bars of hell, the extinction of its fires, the overthrow of its blazing cauldrons, the liberation of Adam and Eve and all the children of men, the final condemnation of Judas Iscariot, the ascent from hell of our Lord, His resurrection, His enthronement on the right hand of the Father in His tabernacle of light in the seventh Heaven, and the reconciliation of God with Adam and his sons.

The whole Apocryphon exhibits strong Egyptian Gnostic influence and professes to give the actual words of the Divine unknown language in which our Lord and the Virgin Mary spoke to each other.

The manuscript from which the text is edited was written probably in the tenth or eleventh century and it was presented to the Church of Hkarte by an unnamed benefactor who states in the colophon that he supplied his own parchment. The form of the name Hkarte suggests that this church was situated in Nubia, perhaps near the modern town of Wadi Halfax.

Leaves of Thin Parchment.

The manuscript consists of twenty-four leaves of thin parchment measuring from 7 1-2 inches to 9 1-2 inches in length and from 6 1-2 inches to 7 1-4 inches in width. The text is written in a good clear hand with a brownish

FEARING THE MOB, AMERICANS FLEE MEXICAN CAPITAL

GEN. HUERTA IS WARNED BY AMBASSADOR WILSON

Huerta, However, Refuses to Prevent the Demonstration. Threat to Use Dynamite on United States Embassy.

Mexico City, July 12.—The American ambassador, Henry Lane Wilson, has protested to the minister of foreign affairs against further anti-American demonstrations, but up to date today no answer had been received at the embassy, and students who are planning to hold a demonstration tomorrow assert that they will not be troubled by the authorities.

In his note to the Mexican government, the ambassador deplored that the youth of the capital were to be permitted to indulge in public manifestations which were calculated to result in violence to Americans resident in Mexico. He indicated the danger of allowing persons to use as tools the students and others who expected to participate.

Warning Given by Wilson.

He reminded the Mexican government that in case any American was injured he would use all the power at the command of the embassy to secure reparation.

Alarmed at the developments of hostile feeling as displayed by the newspapers, the number of Americans leaving for Vera Cruz was greatly augmented today. Ambassador Wilson is sending frequent reports to Washington regarding the situation.

An anonymous letter containing threats to blow up the United States embassy was received by Ambassador Wilson today, and immediately referred to the Mexican foreign office for investigation.

30,000 Workmen to Enlist.

As an indication of the fervor of patriotism that has been aroused in Mexico the department of the interior announced today that representatives of 30,000 workmen had appealed to the government for military instruction in order that they might be ready for the national existence.

The newspaper El Pais says it has been visited by a committee of women school teachers who offered to enter the ranks of the army and fight in case of an international conflict.

Students of the capital are organizing a demonstration for Sunday, in which they have invited all classes to participate. Although the organizers have cautioned those who will participate to keep order, there is grave fear on the part of conservative Mexicans and also among the American colony that the demonstration will provoke serious trouble.

American Attacked.

Despite protests of Ambassador Wilson in regard to the attitude of the newspapers, especially of El Pais, the latter journal devotes its entire first page to the anti-American movement, its articles being highly sensational. Editorially it cautions prudence, but utters a strong intimation that the time is near when Mexicans must fight the United States. It urges the public not to place itself in the position of having provoked a war and to leave the responsibility to the United States. It declares that a "great wave of patriotic enthusiasm has been aroused throughout the country."

It continues its charges against Americans and publishes the facsimile of a telegram from its agent at Puebla asking for 100,000 extra copies of yesterday's paper.

Rebels Loot and Burn.

Guadalajara, Mexico, July 12.—Rebels today looted and burned the camps of Boca Ancha Mining company, a Chicago concern, and of the Gold Standard Mining company, a Philadelphia concern, in the Parnaso district of the state of Jalisco. The buildings of the Gold Standard company were destroyed, and those of the Boca Ancha badly damaged. The American officials escaped from the place before the arrival of the rebels.

B. C. Johnson, the English owner of the Alcihuatal Hacienda, in the Autland district of Jalisco, was driven off the place by the rebels and is hiding with his wife in the mountains. Orders have been sent to the nearest troops to attempt to rescue them.

Rebels cut off the fingers of the Mexican owner of an adjoining ranch with a chisel because he was unable to produce $2,000, which they demanded.

Americans Are Released.

Laredo, Texas, July 12.—Peremptory demands by American authorities today secured the release of the three remaining American prisoners held by constitutionalists at Hidalgo, Mexico, and also the release of two Mexican cowboys who had been taken with the Americans. The party was escorted to Texas soil by United States Consul Garrett, of Nuevo Laredo. It is said the constitutionalists held the party for $4,000 ransom. The Americans released today were the elder Hazlerigg, William Randolph and Isaac Cate.

To Buy Food for Americans.

Washington, July 12.—Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson has sent $1,000 from Mexico City to George C. Carothers, American consular agent at Torreon, Durango, to buy food for Americans unable to leave the country because of their destination.

Torreon is well in the interior of Mexico with meager transportation facilities and the only way to leave the country is by way of Mexico City.

Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford Returns to Atlanta and Surrenders; Goes to Fulton County Tower After Her Return From Tucker, Ga.

SHE DRANK POISON TO DIE, BUT NOW SHE IS ANXIOUS TO LIVE

Rosa Lloyd, 17 years old, of Opelika, Ala., attempted suicide at 69 Luckie street early Saturday night by drinking carbolic acid. She was rushed to Grady hospital, where physicians believe that her life can be saved.

Miss Lloyd has been in Atlanta for over a year, during which time she has been employed by the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company and at the cigar stand of the Kimball house.

At a late hour Saturday night she was better and able to talk. She assigned no reason for wishing to take her life, but stated that now she wants to live.

STILWELL IS SQUEALING ON N. Y. LEGISLATORS

New York, July 12.—Ex-State Senator Stephen J. Stilwell, recently convicted of soliciting a bribe and sentenced to from four to eight years in prison, turned over to District Attorney Weyman today what was said to be statement involving members of the senate and assembly in alleged irregular acts with reference to legislation enacted at Albany last year.

Stilwell's sentence had been stayed.

Hearing on Charge that She Caused Death of Her Husband by Administering Poison Is Set for Next Wednesday Morning.

Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, charged in a warrant with having caused the death of her husband, Joshua B. Crawford, by administering poison, returned to Atlanta from near Tucker, Ga., at 2 o'clock this morning and immediately surrendered to the sheriff and entered the Fulton county Tower. John Cox, an attorney connected with Reuben Arnold's office, which is representing her, brought her back to Atlanta when he learned that she was wanted on a second warrant, and that no bond was possible until the the hearing on next Wednesday. Mrs. Crawford first went to Cartersville and then to Tucker, seeking a witness.

By Vernon Stiles.

When the attack made upon Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, widow of the late Joshua B. Crawford, swung from the civil court to the criminal branch yesterday and bailiffs sought to arrest her on a warrant charging murder, sworn out in Justice C. H. Giradeau's court by Charlie Z. Crawford, the principal litigant in the fight over the Atlantan's $250,000 estate, the fact that Mrs. Crawford could not be found added an element of mystery to the case such as it had not borne before.

Sheriff C. W. Mangum received early Saturday morning a warrant from Coroner C. W. Baskin, of Carroll county, ordering the arrest of the widow on a charge of murder. This warrant was based on the finding of the recent inquest, but the sheriff believed that he had no jurisdiction in Fulton county and summoned Justice

Greeks to Wreak Vengeance on Bulgars for Atrocities; Riots Are Rumored in Sofia; King Is Reported Murdered

Greek King Issues Proclamation Denouncing Bulgars as Monsters and Charging Unspeakable Conduct.

London, July 12.—A Vienna dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says:

"It is rumored here but not confirmed that a revolution has broken out in Sofia and that King Ferdinand has been assassinated."

The secretary of the Bulgarian legation said late tonight he had received no message from Sofia indicating a revolutionary outbreak or that King Ferdinand had been assassinated. The last official telegram received by the legation was sent from Sofia at 9:14 this evening.

Rumors of tumults in Sofia are telegraphed by the Vienna correspondent of the Central News, who reports that a mob stormed the government offices and came into contact with the troops, who fired a volley, killing many people. It is also rumored that the royal palace is surrounded.

GREECE TO WREAK VENGEANCE AS LESSON TO THE BULGARS

London, July 13.—King Constantine's protest to the civilized world against Bulgarian atrocities destroys the last hope of those who believed that Russia would succeed in inducing the belligerents to accept arbitration.

The spectators of the struggle have been confident throughout that Servia would prove amenable to the counsels of moderation in view of the appalling losses she sustained in ejecting the Bulgarians from Macedonia, but were less hopeful that Greece would listen to reason, as her people and army are obviously intoxicated by the victories over the dreaded Bulgars.

In his protest, the Greek king declares:

"I see myself compelled to wreak vengeance in order to inspire these monsters with terror and make them reflect before committing more outrages of this sort."

The strength of King Constantine's language and dispatches from Constantinople late tonight ipdicated that Bulgaria may not merely be stripped of the fruits of her victory over the Turks, but possibly may have to submit to diminution of her own territory, for Rumania is credited with the intention of annexing a larger strip than she at first proclaimed, while Turkey is joining hands with Servia and Greece and has already ordered her troops to advance.

Beyond briefly chronicling the unopposed advance of the Rumanians, Sofia maintains a significant silence regarding the operations of the Servians and Greeks.

ATROCITIES BY BULGARIANS HAVE ENRAGED GREEK KING

Athens, Greece, July 12.—It is semi-officially announced that the Greek government has replied to the Russian proposal for the cessation of hostilities that peace must be concluded on the battlefield. The proposal was supported by Great Britain and France.

Greece, Servia and Rumania Intend to Make Bulgaria Pay Dearly—Mediation Offer Is Refused.

It is reported that the Greek troops today occupied the town of Drama, to the northeast of Seres, hitherto held by the Bulgarians. They are also said to have taken possession of the port of Dedeagatch, on the Aegean sea.

From King Constantine, the Greek minister of foreign affairs has received the following message:

"The commander of the sixth division reports that Bulgarian soldiers, carrying out the orders of their captain, gathered together in the courtyard of the school at Demir Hissar two

TWO HOT FIRES FOR HOKE SMITH OVER PATRONAGE

HALF OF PATRONAGE CLAIMED BY SENATOR

But Hoke Smith Opponents Say He Wants More Than Half—Statement Made by the Senator.

By John Corrigan, Jr.

Washington, D. C., July 12.—(Special.)—Senator Hoke Smith gave his side of the Gainesville postoffice controversy today and indicated briefly his attitude and future course in regard to the distribution of federal patronage, about which there is considerable interesting speculation.

The situation over patronage is more acute than at any time during the past five months. Numbers of nominations are being held up in the postoffice department and the department of justice awaiting a sign from Senator Smith, and the relations between him and Senator Bacon and between Senator Smith and members of the house are becoming exceedingly strained.

Senator Smith and Representative Bell seem divided beyond hope of reconciliation, and other representatives are becoming restive over their appointees being kept back.

Hoke Smith Between Hot Fires.

There is no doubt that Senator Smith is between two hot fires. Besieged on the one hand by eager and clamorous supporters at home demanding offices and reminding him of past support, the faces, on the other hand, determined congressmen who want to control the patronage of their respective districts, to which they believe themselves entitled.

In this situation Senator Smith says all he wants is a division which will give one-half the offices to his own friends and one-half to the opposition.

Disappointed office-seekers and their supporters are claiming he wants more than one-half, and that even in regard to those offices where his hand is not shown it is still potent. It is said Mr. Burleson will not send a single name to the white house unless it has the approval of Senator Smith.

Mr. Bell feels very bitterly over being turned down in his home town.

Senator Smith says it was unreasonable to expect him to actively support one who had always been his political opponent. His policy in regard to appointments, he says, has been to insure efficient service to the government and "keep as far as possible the political obligations I owe to my friends."

Formal Statement by Smith.

Senator Smith, in his formal statement says:

"As I understand the publication by Congressman Bell, he complains because I did not aid him to secure the position of postmaster at Gainesville for a gentleman who had litterly opposed me in every political contest I have ever had.

"Congressman Bell urged that I should help him because his indorsement was opposed by an outside party who had no interest in the Gainesville office and who, he understood, had always opposed me."

"I told Mr. Bell that I would vote for the confirmation as postmaster at Gainesville of anyone whose name was sent to the senate. It was entirely too much for him to ask that I should aid Mr. Hardy in obtaining the appointment, especially since in the interest of harmony I had declined to interfere in behalf of my own friends in this very matter.

"In this connection I wish to state

Georgia Delegation Thus Expresses Thanks for His Work as Gettysburg Commissioner.

Gen. Andrew J. West, who was Georgia's representative on the Gettysburg commission, is the proud owner of a brilliant silver loving cup, presented to the general on the battlefield as a token of appreciation of his work as commissioner by members of the Georgia delegation at the reunion.

No more handsome trophy or interesting souvenir has been brought home by an Atlantan in many a day, and since the return of General West during the past week the cup has attracted wide attention among the people of Atlanta.

It was presented to the general with interesting ceremonies on the morning of July 2, before an assemblage of 5,000 people. Judge Lee Hillyer, who made the presentation speech, warmly thanked General West for his untiring efforts during the months past in working with the commission on the plans and many details of the giant reunion. General West had given his time whole-heartedly, visiting Gettysburg three times, and at his own expense, to meet with the commission. The inscription reads as follows:

"Presented to Gen. Andrew J. West on the battlefield of Gettysburg, July 1, 1913, by his Georgia comrades, for his unselfish work in their behalf."

Everyone who attended the reunion at Gettysburg has brought home many interesting tales and experiences of the enormous event, which have regaled the people of Atlanta during the past week since the return of the veterans. Much comment has also been heard of the speech of Gen. A. J. West, which was delivered on the opening day, July 1, and which is published herewith in full for the first time.

ADDRESS OF GENERAL WEST.

"We stand today on one of the deadliest battlefields of the world's history.

"There are hundreds of other famous battlefields whose appeal and terrible tale, history and song will never tire of telling, but it was here that the struggle in the north and east touched its highest point.

"It is beyond the reach of either brush or chisel to redeem to the imagination such scenes and such as shine forth in the history of the bloody battle of Gettysburg.

"Not until some new-born Homer shall touch the harp can mankind be penetrated by a sense of their heroic deeds, and their alone in the grand majestic minstrelsy of epic song.

"As we see the battlefield today beneath the summer sun, it is a happy story of golden harvest fields, of stately woods, of teeming orchards, of all-owning waters and of cheerful homes. What thoughts come to us when standing on the summit of big Roundtop! A view stretching westward to the Sierras and over the Pacific, northward, to the lakes, southward to the gulf, and eastward to the Atlantic one beholds a continental empire of an industrious and fraternal people; over it beams the benignant heavens, and upon its head and beautiful expanse lies the benediction of peace.

"From the day when the pioneers first reached this fertile valley on their westward way, on through the gradual development of civilization and its transformation by tranquil industry, from a wilderness to a garden, it had been the happy valley that we behold today, secluded from the world until the first, second and third days of July, 1863, when it was revealed in a sudden blaze of glory, with its heights and slopes and meadows, little Roundtop and Seminary Ridge and Cemetery Hill, are caught up into immortal remembrance.

"But we rejoice today that time has adorned our ruined country, and robed her fields in richer harvests, and gilded her skies with brighter years of hope.

"We bring you the greetings of your friends and comrades from the Empire State of the South, with the assurance that Georgia is standing proudly erect, with the flush of prosperity upon her cheeks and the light of hope in her eye, with the Stars and Stripes in her right hand, an emblem of our indivisible union, and with a friendly notice to our brethren in the east, west and north, that we challenge them to a fraternal, but determined rivalry, in building up the resources of this great country.

"We love both flags, let smiles and tears
Together hold their sway.
One, won our hearts in days agone.
One owns our love today."

General Andrew J. West, well-known Atlantan, and the handsome silver loving cup he brought home from Gettysburg.

The roster of the Atlanta aerie shows that it has gained three hundred members within the last six months. The Atlanta aerie is located on the top floor of the Emery-Steiner building, on Viaduct way, and is one of the most attractive fraternal homes in the city, while its drum corps is recognized as one of the best in Atlanta. LEGISLATORS GREETED BY "BARROW CO." FOLKS

Appreciation of House's Action on Barrow County Bill Shown by Reception at Winder.

Winder, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—The members of the senate and house of representatives of Georgia passed through here today in a special train about 11 o'clock. A hard rain preceded their arrival, but at the time of the passage of the special train the clouds had broken and the weather was fine, although the rains of the earlier morning had probably deterred some from coming out.

A large delegation from every part of Barrow county was present to greet the legislators, and enthusiastic cheers rent the air as a token of appreciation of the action of the house in passing the Barrow county bill by such an overwhelming majority, and as an expression of the hopes that the senate will do likewise. Conservative estimates as to the number of people who dared the elements to pay their respects to the legislators make the crowd not less than 1,200 to 1,500 people. They came from every section of Barrow and this fact alone refutes any argument that the people of Barrow outside of Winder are not enthusiastic.

ATTACKS ON WOMEN STIRRING WASHINGTON

Washington, July 12.—Aroused by the attack of a negro upon a white woman here, the fourth such occurrence this week, the police today are making vigorous efforts to discover the assailant of Mrs. William Cordis. She was attacked at noon yesterday, within sight of her home and in a populous neighborhood, by a young negro, who sought to draw her into an alley. Her screams brought several other women to the scene and the negro fled.

The frequency of the attacks have aroused the whites of the District of Columbia and the police are being criticised for their failure to make arrests. Among the women who suffered indignities at hands of black assailants was the sister-in-law of Senator Poindexter, of Washington.

EDITOR TEX IRWIN WEDS MISS DEMPSEY ALDERMAN

Thomasville, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—C. Tex Irwin, editor of The Pavo Progress, joined the ranks of the benedicts this week, being united in marriage to Miss Dempsey Alderman, also of Pavo. Mr. Irwin won his bride by the Gretna Green route, the marriage being performed in Moultrie by the Rev. Mr. Tyler, of the Presbyterian church. There being some opposition on the part of the bride's parents, the young couple met by appointment in that city and were quietly married.

DISPOSITION OF W. & A. OPINIONS ARE SOUGHT

The Atlanta chamber of commerce is sending out a leaflet which discusses the present situation of the Western and Atlantic railroad. Likewise letters are being sent out by the chamber asking the advice of prominent people over the state as to holding some general discussion with a view of bringing out the material facts concerning the proper disposition of this property at the termination of the lease, six years hence.

RIOTING IN BELFAST CAUSED BY ORANGEMEN

Belfast, Ireland, July 12.—Rioting occurred here this morning at the opening of the celebration of the "twelfth," the Orangemen's July festival. Many windows were broken and a number of policemen and civilians were injured.

Rival factions of nationalists and unionists first fought each other furiously and then when a large body of police appeared and endeavored to separate them they joined forces and attacked the policemen.

The fight raged along the streets for over an hour and a half. Sticks were freely used by the civilians, who also threw showers of stones. There as an occasional revolver shot. The policemen drew their clubs and charged and hand-to-hand fighting went on till about 8 o'clock, when the crowds dispersed. Only one arrest was made.

Boys Wreck a Train.

Wayne City, Ill., July 12.—Boys playing in the yards of the Southern railroad yesterday wrecked a passenger train, killing Hugh Frank, of Riverton, Ind., the engineer, and seriously injured the fireman. The engine and two baggage cars were derailed by a 1-inch bolt which the boys placed on a rail.

New Trial Denied Becker.

New York, July 12.—Charles Becker's application for a new trial on the charge of murdering the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, was denied by Supreme Court Justice Goff today. Counsel had sought to reopen the case on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Justice Goff held that the former police lieutenant had had a fair trial. If relief comes to Becker now it must be through the higher courts.

MRS. PAINTER SEEKS LIFE INSURANCE MONEY

Baltimore, July 12.—Asking that the petition of the United States fidelity and guaranty company, for possession of the viscera of Edward O. Painter, a wealthy planter of Florida, be dismissed, Mrs. Martha S. Painter, wife of the deceased millionaire, filed her answer to the company's suit in the circuit court today.

Mrs. Painter claims representatives of the insurance companies were present when medical experts made their report on the condition of the viscera of her husband and that as they did not ask permission to examine the organ at that time they have waived the right of a further autopsy.

Mr. Painter lost his life on May 22, when he fell from a vessel in the St. Johns river. There were policies for $1,250,000 on his life, and it has been suggested that the planter's organs would show the presence of poison.

U. S. BOYS AND GIRLS WANTED BY GUATEMALA

Washington, July 12. — The Guatemalan government, through Minister Mendes, has offered five scholarships, available to American boys and girls desirous of pursuing courses in Guatemalan institutions of learning. The scholarships include board, lodging, uniforms and washing and are good for courses either in military, academic or technical institutions of the city. Guatemalan institutions open to American students, so they may acquire Spanish and obtain an insight into Latin-American ideals, Senor Mendez writes:

"My government is animated by the best ardent spirit of pan-American-ism."

Secretary Bryan, acknowledging Senor Mendez's letter, assured him the United States would give public notice of Guatemala's offer, and added: "This country will suggest to our institutions of learning the propriety of reciprocating the good will expressed by your government."

GEORGIA BRANCH

National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations

Kindergarten Bill Is Now Before the House and Senate

The kindergarten bill that was introduced last year by the Free Kindergarten association and the Georgia Congress of Mothers was brought before the house and the senate this week and will be considered before the committee in a few days. Last year sentiment was strong in its favor and this year the enthusiasm over the entire state leaves little doubt that the bill will receive favorable consideration, as it involves no immediate expenditure of money.

The following is the bill in full:

"1. From and after the passage of this act, any board of education throughout the state, whether known by that name or another, whether created by general or special act, shall have power to establish and provide for kindergartens for the education of the children of not less than 4 years of age within their respective jurisdiction.

"2. Be it further enacted that said kindergartens when so established shall be part of the free common school systems of this state and all funds now available or which may hereafter become available for the maintenance of said system, and all other funds which may come into the hands of said boards of education for educational purposes, shall be available in due proportion for the establishment and maintenance of said kindergartens.

"3. Be it further enacted that no teacher or instructor shall be employed to teach in the kindergartens of this state who has not taken at least a two years' course in kindergarten training in and received a certificate or diploma from a recognized kindergarten normal training school approved by the state board of education.

"4. Be it further enacted that all rules and regulations for examination, qualification and admission of teachers and instructors in the free common school kindergartens in this state shall be prescribed and approved by the state board of education.

"5. Be it further enacted that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

Many States Have Acted.

Many of our states have passed jermissable kindergarten laws and many kindergartens are supported in the different states, but of our 8,000,000 children from 4 to 6, 4,000,000 are out of the kindergarten.

Perhaps we have not realized that the time between 4 and 6 is as important educationally as any other period in the life of the child, that habits formed early in life are most tenacious.

As a child develops so much physically, mentally and morally between birth and the age of 7, it is necessary for it to have suitable training. It would be most difficul tto name the child that needs the kindergarten most. A few mothers may do at home what a kindergarten can do. Others may have a governess or a nurse maid and think this adequate, but mothers that know their limitations in knowledge of child psychology and modern educational methods are striving to give their child true kindergarten advantages, that their minds may be trained for later scientific thinking, the heart for ethical feeling and the imagination for creative expression. The kindergarten gives increased poise in bodily motion, increased resources and the child is better prepared to amuse and instruct himself, but failing in any of these results the child is still happy, active and under wise guidance.

Manufacturers Interested.

Some of our largest manufacturing concerns are expressing their belief in the economic value of kindergarten work in a practical way by supporting kindergartens. Lack of manual and moral training is shown in the reports from penal institutes.

For the dependant children of the state and of different denominations what would a true kindergartener mean in their lives, these little adopted children of ours, who are without the natural mother love, but are cared for and nurtured by some worthy matron that does not understand the child's longing for expression in the world of imagination. If kindergarten is a part of our educational system then these adopted children have the same opportunity for keener perception and co-ordination of mind hand and heart that the more fortunate children have and will have greater opportunities to enter the battles of life.

If kindergarten is good for a few children surely it would be for all.

BILL FOR THE REVISION OF HEALTH LAWS OF STATE

The bill for establishing a state department of health provides just the machinery that is absolutely necessary to secure the maximum degree of health in every part of the state. Such machinery does not now exist; hence the need for the enactment.

It provides for a state board of health, giving to it authority and power to enact and enforce such regulations as are needed to provide uniform and effective health laws and to secure practical results. It provides also for county boards of health, to have supervision over all matters relating to health and sanitation in their respective counties, and with authority to act.

The bill further provides for a state commissioner of health, who shall be in every way competent, and who shall do such things as compile vital and mortuary statistics, make inquiries as to the local causes of diseases, and who shall have power to enforce state health laws and regulations. Associated with him shall be two supervisors of health, who shall do practical work as field agents and educational work, delivering courses of lectures to the pupils of state normal schools.

The bill also provides for a district commissioner of each sanitary district, composed of one or more counties. Such a commissioner, thoroughly qualified for his duties, shall give all his time to his office, and shall have the statutory powers of a constable within his district in all matters pertaining to public health and in the enforcement of the laws of health. The work of the district commissioner, as contemplated in this bill, is the heart of the matter so far as practical results are concerned. His duties are such as making sanitary inspections and surveys of school buildings, grounds and water supply, and examining pupils and teachers and janitors for infectious and contagious diseases.

This comprehensive bill seems in every way sufficient, and with it greatly needed reforms and improvements along the line of health and physical betterment can be accomplished.

Importance of Kindergarten Bill Is Stressed by Mrs. J. R. Little

To Presidents of Parent-Teacher Associations, Mothers' Clubs and All Women Working for the Welfare of the Child: Four bills are to be considered at this legislature pertaining to the welfare of the child. Each is vital in importance to child welfare. There can be no separation of physical, mental, moral and spiritual development of life.

So the bill to revise the laws of the state board of health is most vital. We will not be able to enforce vital statistics or any general health laws until we have county boards of health amenable to a state board.

The work of every mother is to administer to the physical needs of her child first. To accomplish this in a true sense it must be done through general health laws.

The bill for defective children, brought to the house two years ago, will be introduced again this coming week. This bill should reach the heart and mind and every thinking man and woman of the state. These children do not belong to any class, but are in the homes of both rich and poor alike; to aid these children means happiness to many homes now surrounded by gloom.

The kindergarten bill was introduced last week, and will be considered this coming week. The passing of this bill would give to every child an equal opportunity to develop its greatest power and highest instincts; to make its first preparation for life under the guidance of an expert instructor, trained by study and experience to know conditions and methods that will best develop little children.

In striving to give the best that science offers to our own children, can we afford to have a lower and different standard for the children of our state? Let every mother interested in these vital issues write or wire her representative, showing that motherhood stands united in working for the best interest of our children and the future citizens. We ask for co-operation from every section of the state that our representatives will know our women are more interested in the welfare of the child than all other issues.

MRS. J. R. LITTLE, President.

Defective Children.

The question before us now is whether we shall save the state of Georgia money and citizens, or shall we continue in our course and be forced year after year to appropriate large sums for the maintenance of reformatories and insane asylums.

It is said that almost every worker supports two people besides himself—shall we add a third one to this already overburdened individual?

If these weak-minded or deficient children were taken early in childhood and given good, practical, but scientific, training, ninety out of every hundred could be rendered self-supporting and capable of giving and receiving some happiness in this world. A great deal of happiness comes from work that is well done and why should anyone be deprived of this noble pleasure? There is no greater source of misery than enforced idleness of mind and body and we should prevent this from being the fate of anyone.

The schol for defectives that Georgia hopes to build, provides for farm, mechanical and household training.

There will be work for all classes of children in this school and when we have trained them to work to best they can, we have fitted them for happiness and usefulness.

The Mothers' congress has done much noble work, but if it can extend any aid to these helpless ones it will have surely have done God's work. "For even as you do it to the least of these you do it unto Me."

MRS. EUGENE MITCHELL,
Chairman.

Shoeing the World.

American shoes are making their tracks the world over, not those worn by the constant procession of tourists to foreign lands, but the exported cowhide boot and the sturdy shoe for men and the light, finely modeled slipper for the other sex. Everywhere the American-made shoe seems to find favor, and our foreign trade in this product is jumping ahead at a rapid rate. We are showing foreigners how to shoe themselves in a better way than they have ever known, and we are setting a style which is being followed in London, Paris and Berlin.

In the fiscal year ended with June the United States has sent abroad $20,000,000 worth of shoes, boots and slippers. This is an increase of 300 per cent in thirteen years. Not only have peoples of other lands found the American shoe more comfortable, but better appearing than their own make. It is winning on its merits.

SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS COMING INTO THEIR OWN

UNEDUCATED CHILD HAS LITTLE CHANCE

State School Commissioner Writes of Educational Conditions in Georgia—Not Enough Teachers.

By M. L. BRITTAIN
State Superintendent of Schools.

A false impression could readily gain currency from much that we see and hear concerning educational conditions in this state. It is emphatically true that the slip-shod easy-going fiscal system, under which we have been operating for years and which, perhaps, was fairly suitable for less complex conditions, has caused the state to fall behind in the ability to meet promptly all obligations. This is felt most seriously by the public schools because while most boards of education borrow money to make up for the delay of the state yet these interest charges amount to nearly a hundred thousand dollars annually coming from the school fund and, therefore, diminish teachers' salaries and educational facilities by just that much. This naturally presses most severely on the weaker communities, those most dependent with regard to financial operations, and really those most in need of all the help possible for the proper conduct and management of their schools. Any man with a spark of generosity and patriotism in his nature is obliged to see this. It looks as if the general assembly is determined to correct this, the most pressing need of all educational work in Georgia. The sufferers mainly will be women and children. If it is allowed to continue, and even if other population does not go far enough to desire proper training for Georgia's future citizenship, surely every instinct of manhood calls for justice to the most helpless and the most helpful of all our public servants.

To remedy this, however, will not be difficult if the general assembly really has a heart desire to do so. A bond issue, a tax levy, or what is more certainly a real remedy—a business like readjustment of our fiscal system will cure the ailment just as it has done other states. Such a readjustment as Minnesota a short time ago rendered it possible for the state to maintain all her institutions during the preceding year without any state levy for taxes. There is nothing poverty stricken about Georgia, everybody knows—or can learn with very little effort—that no state in this whole section can compare with us in resources so far as the ability to pay our debts, and to pay them promptly is concerned. No state can sell one single piece of property the W. & A. R. R.—and nobody very outstanding obligation, all debts of bonds, and put ten millions of dollars in the treasury. There is not another commonwealth about us so fortunately situated. There is no reason, therefore, for pessimism of any kind in regard to our ability.

The crop reports from all sections of the state indicate that this is to be a fat year for our farmers. The wheat and corn in particular are in good condition. This insures prosperity not only to the farmers, but to the people generally. In consequence we look for the banner year educationally in our history. When the fall term opens we confidently expect the largest attendance we have ever had in the public schools as well as in our higher institutions of learning.

Cannot Meet Demand.

Every year by reason of the matrimonial lure, the temptations of business, and on account of other causes we need from two to three hundred teachers in the schools established by the state, namely, the State Normal School at Athens in north Georgia, the one at Milledgeville in middle Georgia, and the new institution recently created at Valdosta in south Georgia, will not altogether supply one-fifth supply which is needed. Fortunately, however, many others of our leading institutions are strengthening their work in higher training and helping to meet the demand. The university in particular has enlarged its facilities enough to get part of the load off Athens and has arranged for a large faculty, under the leadership of Dr. Soper, to take charge of the special work in the school of education, and the university, as I learn through conference with Dr. Harrison, will pay increased attention also to the professional preparation of teachers. Emory College for years has been notable in that men who have come from her halls to lead have had the training implanted upon with certainty to give emphasis along this line. Agnes Scott, Wesleyan, Shorter, Mercer, Piedmont and our other splendid colleges for women may be counted upon with certainty, as heretofore, to give us some of their best graduates to replenish the depleted ranks and to aid the cause of education with their enthusiastic spirit. This, of course, is the narrow view. It is frankly written from the standpoint of a school man who wishes to get so far as possible as much of the splendid current from these fountains of learning into educational channels. One feels that the other professions and industries in life, when reinforced by education, offer such tremendous inducements on the material side that there is little need of making argument. Everybody thinking for himself must know that as a rule the more thorough his training for life the better will be his work. Here and there will be exceptions—notably by reason of the very fact that they are exceptions—where strong men through native genius, well limited advantages, have pushed themselves ahead of their associates. In the period of privation and poverty which came upon the generation after the Civil war it was particularly true that many men came to the front without training. Times have changed since then, however, and it will be much more difficult for history to repeat itself in this way at present. Indeed, as stated before, it is always been exceptional where without advantages and training.

Some Striking Figures.

"The second edition of 'Who's Who in America' contains 1,300 pages of biographies, without eulogy, criticism or comment, of such persons now living in America as have become noted as factors in the progress and achievement of the age. 'Endeavor has been made,' say the editors, 'to include all Americans of more than local note in all lines of useful effort.' No name is inserted or omitted for financial consideration; the book is sold on its merits.

With a view to determining what effect education of the various grades has had on success in life, effort was made to ascertain the school training of each of these men and women "of more than local note" and 7,852 on their United States list were thus educationally classified.

According to the best estimate we can make from the latest census returns, there are in the United States 40,782,007 persons over 21 years old. These are divided educationally about as follows:

Class 1—Without school training	4,682,498
Class 2—With only common school training	32,862,951
Class 3—With common and high school training	2,185,357
Class 4—With college or higher education added	1,071,201

Now the question is, how many of the 4,800 distinguished citizens of the United States on the Who's Who list came from each of these classes?

Only One Chance in 150,000.

It thus appears:

First, That an uneducated child has one chance in 150,000 of attaining distinction as a factor in the progress of the age.

Second, That a common school education will increase his chances nearly four times.

Third, That a high school training will increase the chances of the common school boy and more than eight hundred times the chance of the untrained.

It is a surprising fact that of 7,852 "notables" thus gathered, 4,810 proved to be full graduates of colleges.

From the nature of the case it cannot be claimed that these figures are exact, but they are based upon the most reliable government statistics and the necessary estimates have been made with care. It is also doubtless true that other circumstances contributed to the success of these college trained men, but after all reasonable allowances are made the figures still force the conclusion that the more school training the child has, the greater his chances of distinction will be.

Septuagenarian Arctic Explorer.

(Scientific American.)

It is reported that Captain Peter Bayne, who in 1865 was attached as a seaman to Captain C. F. Hall's expedition in search of the remains of Sir John Franklin and his party, and who is probably the last survivor of that enterprise, has purchased the old arctic schooner Duxbury at Seattle, and will head an expedition to Victoria Land, sailing next June. Captain Bayne is 69 years old.

Equal Rights.

(From The Washington Star.)

"You say a pedestrian has rights the same as a motor car?" asked the querulous person.

"Certainly," replied the policeman.

"Well, mebbe he has. But I can't help wondering what would happen to me if I went along the street making the same kind of noise as some of these automobile horns."

Remarkable Growth of Technological Schools One of Signal Triumphs of Modern Science

BY CHAS. C. THACH.
President Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

One of the most signal triumphs of modern physical science and one of the most far-reaching movements in all the history of education, is the development within the last fifty years of that phase of education called technical or industrial, not exactly a revolution, but rather an evolution, persistently pervasive, it has completely metamorphosed the face of our school system. Greek, Latin and mathematics, this trinity, fifty years ago, well nigh constituted the schedule of the college and university. The chief class regarded was the governing class, and the aim in view was almost exclusively statecraft or mancraft. The only proper study of mankind was man: the utilitarian was derided. Ignorance, well nigh complete, prevailed as to the stupendous mechanical forces of nature, or the wonderful forces of plant and animal life. Agriculture was largely a series of motions inherited from Adam, while the chief forms of energy were the human muscle or the mule.

Now, the aim of the new education is to dignify labor and to fit men for the practical business of life. Necessarily, in any scheme of education there must be full recognition of man's human or spiritual elements; but technical education is not to supplant but merely to supplement the sound training of the older school. Man has a spirit, but he also has a body, and man and his ways is only half of the story of education; there are "things and their forces," and the knowledge and mastery of "things and their forces" sums up the history of the wonderful industrial development of the last five decades.

Technical education, therefore, while training the intellect and sensibilities of youth, would also train his constructive and executive faculties. It would fit the boy not only to think and speak, but to act and to accomplish. To produce economic goods, to increase wealth, to get mastery over the forces of nature, steam, electricity, waterfalls, mines, the field and in forest; to contribute to the material welfare of man—these are some of the aims of technical education.

Land-Grant Colleges.

The great movement under discussion in the United States takes its origin with almost mathematical precision from the year 1862, the most important factor in effecting this gigantic change in the educational world being the land-grant or agricultural and mechanical college, an institution established, one in each state, under the provisions of the federal act known as the Morrill act of 1862—one of the most far-reaching acts of constructive statesmanship in the history of our government; and, resultant therefrom, one of the greatest systems of technological institutions in the world. Up to 1862, scientific training in American colleges was only fragmentary. Harvard, Yale and Princeton offered only a few parallel courses of science, the University of Virginia, among American universities, having given the greatest impetus to the study of the natural sciences. There were but few laboratories throughout the land, and these most inadequately equipped.

Today no institution can hold its own without complete laboratory outfit and a full staff of instructors in all the applied sciences. Says the late General Francis Walker, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "The schools of applied science in the country are today doing a work in the intellectual development of our people which is not surpassed by that of any other type of college. In them is to be found almost the perfection of education for young men." According to the recent report of the United States department of agriculture, the agricultural and mechanical, or land-grant colleges, are sixty-eight in number with 5,352 professors, 92,852 students, 8,368 graduates in 1912, with property valued at $129,073,861 — certainly a mighty engine for promoting the cause of education throughout the land.

Aim of Technical College.

The purpose and aim of these colleges is not to develop the mere artisan, but rather to develop captains of industry, men who, as engineers, chemists, agriculturalists, metallurgists, superintendents, or executive officers, are able to exploit the resources of the land, to bring labor and capital together in mutual gain, and to plan, organize and direct industries of the greatest magnitude and of the most far-reaching influence upon the community.

Trade School.

I should remark, in passing, that it seems there is immediate need for specific trade schools in certain cities. In the south, the conditions demanding them having developed rapidly within the immediate past. The day is now at hand when in cities of large population like Atlanta and Birmingham, with highly differentiated forms of industries, the young people may with great advantage, be instructed in the sciences relating to these specific industries. On every hand, the demand for skilled labor is urgent, the supply being entirely inadequate, and this training our white children must have, or all forms of industrial occupation will pass from their control.

Benefits of Technical Education.

To mention only one or two of the outstanding benefits to society accruing from the technical education, there may be noted, in the first place, that the introduction of technical education into the school or college curriculum has found a place for a large number of youth who have no aptitude for language, for historic facts, philosophy and those masses of information that are carried by memory. All minds, as has been found, are not fashioned on the identical pattern; some being literary, some distinctively non-literary, but highly scientific or highly constructive. Darwin was not a linguist. I am sure that too much attention has been given by our school training in the past to mental gymnastics, that often mean only nimbleness and power of acquisition, rather than strength of mind and power to think. Often a clever boy, with mind stuffed with all the fights historical from Marathon to Waterloo, in order categorical, stands like a baby in the presence of something that has to be done. Like a boa constrictor, he has swallowed the huge bulk of the undigested college curriculum and is utterly incompetent in any art or trade. Is it not much more important to be able to do something than it is to answer a string of questions? On the other hand, many a boy that would pass as dull in the ordinary studies of the school, displays in the shop some of the finest qualities of mind and hand, that can turn a lot of unrelated fragments of wood or metal into a thing of beauty and utility.

Another supreme good derived from technological institutions is the utter destruction of the old-time folly that despised manual labor as a badge of slavery. Today thousands of gentleborn youths throughout the south are issuing annually from our technical institutions to put their hand manfully to any honest work whereby a livelihood may be gained. One of the most hopeful signs of the time is a hundred or more southern youths, in shirt sleeves and blue overalls, skillfully manipulating some complex machine and shaping up some finished product of their own skill and ingenuity. These youths are not of the kid-glove and silk-stocking set of parasites. They are not too fine for any form of honest work and are qualified to take useful places in the industrial world, rather than swell the throng of useless and unhappy applicants in the overcrowded and underpaid positions in stores and counting houses, where a generally poor living may be obtained without soiling one's fingers."

A Distinct Vitalizing Power.

Beyond all question, throughout our southern states these technological students have been a distinctly vitalizing power to every practical trade, science and art. Forty years ago there was scarcely a young man in the state of Georgia or Alabama, in polite society, who had any knowledge whatsoever of engines and machinery, their structure, the methods of operation, and the principles that govern them. Within this period, it has been my privilege to see many thousands of young men instructed in the practical arts, and fitted to multiply the productive power of their states many thousandfold. For instance, the greatest hydro-electric development in the south was conceived and carried to a successful issue by a young technical student, who secured his knowledge of the transmission of electrical energy in the college lecture room. The opportunity for training given him by his state resulted in the investment of millions of foreign capital and in the potential development of other millions in home industries. This is the rich increment that comes to a commonwealth for money invested in brains. Another striking instance is that of the successful management of the largest steel producing plant in the entire south by a young man trained in the chemical and metallurgical departments of a southern technological school. There is, perhaps, no greater need in the industrial life of the south than this mechanical sense, this ability to utilize the power of steam and electricity instead of mere human energy. The great prizes of modern industrial life are rewards of efficiency—and efficiency means the maximum production with the minimum amount of output; which, in turn, means the maximum amount of mechanical force and technique with the minimum amount of crude muscle.

Perhaps one of the most satisfactory evidences of the business quality of technical training is afforded by the great demand in all quarters for men of technical education. For many years there has been recrimination between the business world and the educational world; but the gulf between the two today has been bridged by the technical school. The young man trained therein, when he steps beyond the threshold, has a certain amount of skill to sell, and the demand is far greater than the supply. The ability of a young man to capitalize his education, while it is not the sole end of education, is a highly valuable end. Thousands of young men who have gone out from southern technical schools are today engaged in developing the material resources of the south.

Agriculture.

And not only have the mechanical and industrial trades felt the quickening influence of technical education, but agriculture, as well, in all of its departments, has felt the same tremendous uplift. It would be a sad fact, indeed, if men were not able to master the forces that govern plant life and that govern the production of animals. Without such ability, the limit of population and of physical sustenance would soon be reached. But the mastery of these forces is today an accomplished fact. Agriculture has established itself as a science. Book farming is no longer sneered at, and there has been a universal recognition by the farming interests throughout the south of the direct, practical value of the results of the colleges of agriculture and of experiment stations. Within the last few years there has been a remarkable growth in the demand for young men trained in scientific agriculture, and many of the most talented, mature and serious youth of the country are now entering into this field of education. The testing and breeding of seeds (cotton, corn, oats and all staple crops); the testing of fertilizers under thousands of varying conditions; the analysis of commercial fertilizers; the promotion of profitable production of beef, pork, poultry and sheep; the conservation of soils; improved methods of cultivation; drainage; the use of improved farm implements; farmers' institutes; boys' and girls' farm and garden clubs —this incomplete catalogue of a few of the leading activities of the experiment station indicates the tremendous range and value of the work.

The improvement of the variety of seeds (cotton, corn, oats, etc.) by experiment stations has enormously increased the annual production of crops.

The protection afforded against spurious and worthless brands of fertilizers by the efficient system of inspection inaugurated by the state colleges of agriculture has saved the farmer millions of dollars.

The boys' corn clubs, aided by other organized scientific agencies, have increased the annual corn production of the south by hundreds of millions of bushels, thus keeping millions of dollars at home for investment instead of going into the west.

The invention of the milk-testing device by Prof. Babcock, University of Wisconsin, created a new rural life in that state, making it the center of the cream and butter trade and adding vast sums to the tax list. This one invention, it is stated, has paid many times over the entire expense of the university, whose annual income is over two million dollars.

The matter of commercial fertilizers is entirely a question of a chemical formula. In 1840 the principle of artificial manures was discovered by the great chemist, Liebig, and today, millions of acres of land, hitherto regarded as absolutely sterile, through the judicious use of this chemical discovery, are the most productive and the most dependable agricultural sections of the country. From this discovery has likewise sprung the great industry of commercial fertilizers, amounting in the south to over seventy-five million dollars.

Perhaps the most urgent question confronting the people of the south today is the conservation of our soils. We have mined our lands rather than farmed them. We have skimmed the cream. And it is to the experiment stations and agricultural colleges, with

GEORGIA COLLEGES FOR GEORGIA BOYS

By DAVID C. BARROW,
Chancellor of the University of Georgia.

Georgia boys should attend Georgia colleges. At this season those who are in charge of the youth of the state are giving careful consideration to this matter. The boy has finished his high school and the question of selecting a college is being considered. It is recognized as a serious question.

I desire to express the opinion that in any college the young man is better protected from the temptations which beset youth, than he is at any other situation, awa yfrom his home, outside of a college. This statement is based on my personal experience and on inquiry into the experiences of others.

It must be admitted, however, that the change from the watchfulness of the high school and the home to the comparative freedom of the college is at best a time which tests the young man and causes an earnest thought. The matter becomes more serious when the student goes into new surroundings among people whose customs are strange. The college near the home relieves the situation of some of its difficulties and temptations and is a protection to the student in this change from high school to collegee. He is among his own people, who have the habits and ideas to which he is accustomed. It would seem that this is a consideration which should not be neglected in selecting a college.

Another consideration is that acquaintance and friendships of after life. My father was sent by his guardian to New England schools and to Harvard college. He regretted the loss of his acquaintance with Georgia boys all of his life. I have often heard him say that a great mistake was made in his case. He sent five of his six sons to the university. One son who had a desire for a military training, went to West Point. I am sure that my father's conclusion is correct. It is a mistake to send a boy away from those with whom he is to spend his life, at the time when he is making his friends. I would not give my college friendships for a good plantation.

Cost Less in Georgia.

The cost in a Georgia college is much less than that in the larger and richer colleges. I know that this carries some students away from this state. It is true of education, as of many other things, that people estimate value by cost. I believe that it is more valuable, not to say unwise, to place education on the basis of the money spent that is true of anything I know, except religion. Still, people who have a lot of money wish to spend with the spenders. I regard the regulation of the expenses, the scientific use of money, as a part of education. I do not think the mere spending of money is so difficult as to be considered a part of education.

The great question is the education which a boy gets. An institution cannot can get as good training in Georgia as elsewhere. It is quite likely that the Georgia boy will get better training at one of his home colleges than he will get anywhere outside of the state. I am sure I can prove that this is not a boost but a fact. I believe that the statistics of the work done by the bachelors from Georgia colleges will convince anyone of the truth of the statement. I do not claim that any Georgia college has sufficient endowment for very advanced graduate work.

The Best Right at Home.

As I am satisfied that a boy can get as good traininting in his bachelor's course in Georgia colleges as he can get anywhere, I advise that he go to his home college.

I will close this statement with an extract from the charter of the university. This charter was approved January 27, 1785. The experience of more than a century approves the wis*dom of its statement. This charter is* one of the great utterances of that time when men were mightily stirred and responded mightily.

"When the minds of people in general are viciously disposed and unprincipled, or when literature, arts and a free government will be attended with greater confusions and evils more horrid than the wild uncultivated state of nature. It can only be when the public principles and opinions are properly directed and their manners regulated. This is an influence beneficial to every species of government, and be claimed only by religion and education. It should therefore be among the first objects of those who wish well to the national prosperity to encourage and support the principles of religion and morality, and early to place the youth under the forming hand of society, that by instruction, they may be moulded to the love of virtue and good order. Sending them abroad to other communities for their education will not answer these purposes, is too humiliating an acknowledgement of the ignorance or the inferiority of our own, and will always be the cause of so great foreign attachments, that upon principles of policy it is inadmissable."

that it has been my policy wherever I made a recommendation at all in reference to appointments in Georgia to secure efficient service for the government and at the same time to repay as far as possible the political obligations I owe to my friends. Surely no congressman can complain of this. It is the rule they all adopt and is one that properly suggests itself to every man with a spark of gratitude in him.

No Boycott on Anti-Wilson Men.

"I have endeavored at all times to recognize the rights and obligations of my colleagues in both houses. There has been absolutely no disposition or purpose here, so far as I know, on the part of anyone to exclude from recognition those Georgia democrats who saw fit to oppose the president in the recent primary in an honorable and proper manner, and any statement to the contrary is entirely unfounded.

"I have, however, insisted, and shall continue to insist, that nowhere in Georgia men be discriminated against because they have been supporters of the president or of myself, and I think it but my simple duty to see that they have a fair and just proportion of the appointments."

Bartlett and Macon Office.

Representative Bartlett's action in putting forward a candidate for the Macon postoffice to succeed Harry S. Edwards has occasioned considerable surprise among the Georgia delegation.

Senator Bacon had selected Curtis Nottingham for the place, as under the invariable rule of the senate a senator has the right to name the postmaster of his home town. Despite this well-known custom Representative Bartlett put forward William T. Morgan for the position.

Neither Senator Bacon nor Representative Bartlett would discuss the matter today, and Mr. Bartlett declined to say whether he counted upon the support of Senator Smith to put through his nominee.

Mr. Morgan is a merchant and banker of Macon. He is about 45 years of age and is known as a substantial citizen. Nottingham, Senator Bacon's nominee, is a well-known lawyer and widely respected. The contest is of special interest because of its bearing on other patronage problems in the state.

Representative William Schley Howard is out of the city until today. It is not known whether he will attempt to nominate a postmaster in Atlanta. This place has been universally conceded to be Mr. Smith's patronage.

Eugene Lee.

The funeral services of Eugene Lee will be held this afternoon at 5 o'clock at Bloomfield's chapel, and the interment will be in the Atlanta Park cemetery.

Granted Insurance After Lung Trouble

As many cases of Lung Troubles start with a cold or a cough, the best advice that can be given is to get rid of the cold or cough as quickly as possible. Otherwise, more serious troubles are likely to follow. If the medicines you are now taking do not bring relief, try Eckman's Alterative, the remedy for Throat and Lung Troubles, which has stood the test of time. Investigate this case:

227 Dean St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Dear Sirs: About a year ago I had my health rapidly failed until at the end of six months my weight had fallen to 128 pounds. I was troubled with night sweats, a severe cough and was very weak. About this time I consulted a physician, but received no relief. He advised me to take Eckman's Alterative. The night sweats stopped almost immediately. I soon became stronger and gradually increased my weight to 142 pounds, and my physician has pronounced me perfectly sound, which, together with the fact that I have been accepted by two different insurance companies for insurance, makes me sure of my entire recovery by Eckman's Alterative. W. E. GEE.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in rebuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' drug stores and other leading druggists. EDWARDS REFUSES TO GIVE UP HIS JOB

Macon Postmaster Says He Won't Resign Position and President Will Have to Fire Him.

Macon, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Postmaster Harry Stillwell Edwards, of Macon, whose resignation has been requested by the postmaster general, today gave out a statement in which he says he had notified the postmaster general that he will not resign, and has put the matter directly up to the president to remove him from office.

The news from Washington yesterday was the first intimation Macon people have had of the plan to oust Mr. Edwards, though today he stated he had received the request for his resignation some time ago.

The action is, of course, based on the fact that Mr. Edwards is not a democrat, he having been an appointee of President Roosevelt and supported the Bull Moose leader during his recent race.

Senator Bacon's nomination of Curtis Nottingham will hardly be put through without opposition. Congressman Bartlett is said to have a nominee in the person of W. T. Morgan, and today Mr. Edwards released Hillyer Rudisill, his assistant, from all obligations and placed him in nomination for the office of postmaster.

Mr. Rudisill is a democrat, being named during the Cleveland administration, and was a holdover under Mr. Edwards. He will have the backing of a large portion of the substantial business men of the city.

NEW GOSPEL FOUND TELLING HOW JESUS

black ink, but some of the characters are decorated with red ink, which is used for writing the name of Jesus, etc.

The first four or five leaves of the manuscript are wanting. These, no doubt, contained, in addition to the title of the work, a description of the crucifixion of the Savior, which ends with the words "In the peace of the Father. Amen."

The manuscript goes on:

"Now, when they had crucified the Savior they laid Him in a tomb. But He rose from the dead upon the third day, (and) He carried the soul of the body man Ananla with Him into heaven forthwith and He ate and drank with our Savior at the table of His kingdom. And Joseph of Arimathea made ready for burial of the body of the Son of God, and when large quantities of most precious scents and unguents had been poured out upon it he laid it in a new sepulchre.

Then Death Came.

"Then Death came into Amente, saying: 'Where is this soul which hath come forth from the body newly? It hath not been brought unto me to Amente. For, behold, I have sought for it two years and more. Then, no found it. What then is (the meaning of) this mighty and wonderful thing? I know not, neither do I know what is the meaning of this terrible disturbance (which taketh place) this day.' The whole world and everything which is therein is in a state of violent commotion. Never before have I known anything like unto this.' And Death called his minister and said unto him: 'Let us go unto every place and see if we can find this newly-dead body and this new soul which hath hidden itself, for I know not whither it hath departed.'

"Then Death came into the tomb of the Savior and he found it lighted up with the light of life, and he went into the back of the tomb and seated himself there with his ministers. Now Abbaton, who is Death, and Gaiou and Trephon and Ophiath and Phthinnu and Sotomis and Komphion, who are the six sons of Death, wriggled into the tomb of the Son of God on their faces in the form of serpents wriggling in with their great thief in every truth. These robbers and evildoers were lying in wait for the moment wherein the Savior would go down into Amente so that they might enter with Him and know what it was He would do.

Savior Makes Himself Manifest.

"And the Savior made Himself manifest unto them in the form of a dead body in the bladder part of the tomb; He was lying upon the ground in their midst—now it was the second day that He was in the heart of the earth—and there was a napkin around His face and another one bound round His head.

"And Death said unto his son, that is to say, The Pestilence (or Plague), 'Hath this soul which hath died recently been brought unto thee to Amente? Shew me, for I am disturbed greatly by this terrible quaking and I do not know what hath happened this day. The place here hath quaked under me, the atmosphere hath been agitated, the foundations of the heavens are disturbed, the hours have been shortened, the nights are put out, of course, the days have lengthened.'

"The breaks which occur in the text of the next eleven lines make it impossible to give a connected translation of the rest of the speech of Death. It seems, however, that Death goes on to complain that the doorkeepers of hell have ceased to guard the doors, that the fires have become extinguished, that Gehenna has gone cold, that the servants and ministers and envoys of hell are unoccupied, that the angels thereof are scattered abroad and that his power has passed into the hands of strangers.

Death Addresses Jesus.

The text continues: "Addressing the dead body of Jesus, Death saith, 'Who art thou?' What art thou? (There is none) stronger than thou. Thou hast disturbed me exceedingly. I, who am wont to destroy everyone (hast thou) destroyed. And now, behold, I do not know what thou art in this form.'

"Then Jesus removed the napkin which was on His face and He looked in the face of Death and laughed at him.

"Now as Death gazed on the Savior He was laughing at him, he became greatly disturbed, and he fled away back and fell down upon the earth with his six sons. And again Death rose up and walked toward the dead body of Jesus, and he was greatly afraid and trembled and shook; now his little ones went slowly back. And again Jesus looked in the face of Death and laughed. And again Death said unto Him, 'Who art thou? Shew me. Is it (true) that thou art the first born of the Father, the Holy Lamb? Surely thou art not He.'

"Then Jesus went down into Amente. He broke in pieces the doors and smashed their bolts and dragged away and destroyed the door posts and frames. He overthrew the blazing furnaces of brass and extinguished their fires, and removing everything from Amente, left it like a desert. He put in fetters 'the shameless ones' and bound the ministers of Satan; He also bound a fiend, whose name is wanting, and He tied up the devil called Melkhir with an iron chain.'

The text continues:

"Then the Savior turned to the man who had betrayed Him, that is to say, to Judas Iscariot, and He said unto him: 'Tell me, Judas, in what way didst thou profit by betraying Me unto Lord (to the Jewish) rule?' Assuredly I only endured suffering of all kinds in order to fulfill (the will) of My Father and to redeem (and set free) My creatures which I had fashioned. As for thee, woe be unto thee, with two-fold woes."

ATLANTA NORMAL PLANS TO GIVE STUDENTS WORK

The Atlanta Normal and Industrial institute is planning through a few white friends interested in work education to enlarge that phase of the school by opening a laundry and other places for trades which will aid girls and boys who must work their way to help themselves when school opens September 24.

W. O. Foote has inspected the property and highly commends it. Charles J. Haden makes a donation and recommends the school and its principal. Mrs. T. B. Blackstone and Miss Christena Arbuckle have sent their checks to aid in getting the plant in shape.

Richard D. Stinson has just had a six weeks' trip in the interest of the school and he says while their burdens are heavy and the school is much in need of funds to pay off pressing debts, the signs and promises of the future are very good indeed. He is planning for 350 pupils next term if accommodation and work can be given them. He says the salvation of the negro race depends on building up an honest and pure home, learning how to do something well with their hands and trained up well along religious lines, whatever may be said to the contrary.

FEDERATION OF LABOR FLAYS GOVERNOR BROWN'S MESSAGE

LAY MURDER CHARGE TO STATE NATIONAL GUARD

Ask Legislature to Make Investigation of the "Augusta Massacre" and Place Militia Subservient to Civil Power.

The Georgia Federation of Labor has issued a card to the public in answer to the speech of the then governor, Joseph M. Brown, on October 29, 1912, at a banquet given by his military staff, entitled "The Supremacy of the LAW," and it is also intended to answer and refute his references to organized labor in his retiring message to the legislature. It says in part:

The ex-governor caused upward of 250,000 copies of his banquet speech, in pamphlet form, to be mailed throughout the state, largely to the farmers.

"Truly, he was mightily impressed with its transcendent eloquence and importance! Can it be that the governor disseminated this speech so widely as a campaign document? That he, in such speech attempted to array the country voter against the town and city voter, is demonstrably true. A more cruel, yet clumsy, effort to arouse the prejudices of the rural voter against his brothers who toil upon the railroads, in factories, mills or workshops, has never been exhibited.

Watson Roasted Him.

"It is true that he had been excoriated by various newspapers, and by some of his erstwhile political cronies, for his part in the Augusta massacre, hereinafter more fully referred to. For instance Hon. Thomas E. Watson, who helped to make him governor, roasted him to a crisp denouncing those military murders and the governor's connection therewith. Tom Watson's scathing denunciation in words that fairly sizzled. And it may be that, smarting dreadfully under such lashings and his consciousness of having him for the part he played in the awful tragedy, the governor vainly sought to justify himself in the eyes of an outraged people.

"And right here, let us add, as will hereinafter appear, that while parts of his flamboyant address breathed such noble plattitudinal sentiments, other parts were filled with anarchistic, inflammatory utterances, with a decided tendency to subvert law and order.

"The governor took as his text the then recent strike upon the Georgia railroad. The strike had been virtually settled by arbitration, and it seems the governor wanted to notify, all and singular, the union railway employees of Georgia that he, Joseph Mackey Brown, would not stand for any more strikes upon the railroads of the state; and, as we have calmly shown above, he seems to have used this subject as a pretext to array the country against the town, for selfish political ends.

"What was the truth of the case? "A conductor and a flagman had been discharged. These men belonged to their respective brotherhoods, which had served on the grievance committees of their organizations. As members of this committee they were allowed to appear before the superintendent Brand in the discharge of their duties to protect the rights of their fellow members and, as the sequel proved, they incurred the enmity of Mr. Brand.

"The conductor, who had done faithful service for the road for upwards of twenty years, was summarily discharged because the engineer of his train, en route to Atlanta from Augusta, had been on duty about twenty minutes over the sixteen-hour limit, though the conductor himself had lacked seven minutes of being on duty the prescribed limit before his train was safely put in the side track. Certainly the conductor himself, in having violated the statute, it looked like spite work on the part of Superintendent Brand to discharge him under the circumstances.

Turned in Expense Account.

"The flagman had been directed to attend court at Decatur in a case pending against the company. The company obligated itself to pay the flagman for his lost time and expenses. Later he turned in his per diem and expense account. This was disputed by the company (the amount in dispute being $2.15) and the flagman was discharged and branded with the charge of dishonesty. These two men felt aggrieved and complained to their organizations. They felt that they had been made the victims of Mr. Brand's displeasure on account of their service on the grievance committee. The executive officers of these labor organizations examined into the facts. For a period of nearly four months they sought to have this injustice done these men redressed, without results. Often their efforts to obtain interviews with Mr. Brand and President Scott were brusquely refused and rebuked. Finally, the railroad officials remaining obdurate, the men offered to arbitrate the matter, which was refused.

"For four long months they tried their level best to adjust the matter peaceably. And the sequel proved that they were discharged wrongfully when the verdict of the arbitrators rendered their award, for they ordered the restoration of these men, with back wages.

"The governor said:

"The management hired other men and attempted to operate some of their trains. The men were beset by mobs, who made themselves the fighting partners of the strikers.

"In point of fact, the governor was compelled to admit that the strikers held aloof and did not participate in any of the disorders. Such disorders that occurred (and the governor grossly exaggerates them) were committed by the general public, part of the 400,000 citizens affected, as the governor says, by the strike.

"In the wrongful discharge of the conductor and flagman by the Georgia railroad, which eventually caused the strike, the governor sees only the railroad's side of the controversy, and his utterances betray the just cause and contention of the striking employees. We have with deep sincerity regretted, however, that the governor actuated by political motives in this whole affair? But just here it may be well to refer to the governor's antecedents, and see therefrom if he has any undue bias in favor of the railroad companies.

"Hon. Joseph E. Brown, the lamented father of 'Little Joe,' was the bosom friend of the state road for many years.

"Barring his ('Little Joe') political jobs, the latter has for the last three or four years been as a railroad official. Perhaps, ordinarily, that fact may account for his excessive zeal in standing by, and for, the railroad's interests, right or wrong.

"Why was it that Governor Brown did not plainly intimate to the Georgia railroad that it had to comply with its charter and run its trains? Why did he not, through the impartial arbitration of government officials; and it was the railroad which was responsible for the continuation of the strike.

"Therefore, what becomes of all the governor's heroics, and denunciation of the striking employees. Indeed, obsessed with his crazy desire to subvert the civil authorities with the military, he unblushingly declares that 'if such disorders as those of August 5th during this administration the state will not await the slow process of arbitration, but will promptly meet the issue tendered her, and enforce her laws.'

"That is, he would tear down the only practical, effective tribunal or court set up by the state, and set at defiance its laws, and settle strikes with bullets.'

"And to cap the climax, the Hon. Joseph Mackey Brown suddenly gets himself into the attitude of the Joseph Mackey Brown suddenly as the Sacred Keeper of the Ark of Law and Order, becomes, himself, a veritable howling anarchist, inciting his fellow citizens, under certain circumstances, to murder!

"Here is a man clamoring for the 'supremacy of the law,' and yet he says that if another strike is brought about, and if troops are called up, then, and then only the people will rise in their anarchistic wrath and burn the homes of the railroad officers and sympathizing friends, and their families will be scorched to death! And where are those 7,000 wicked and desperate railroad employees would likely be found? Why, in the front rank, and upon 7,000 lamp posts? And where would the Sophistopheles be who opened up this Pandora's box of horrors, but, in his favorite, his family farm?

"Governor Brown concludes his supremacy of the law' extolling the action of the militia in killing three non-offending citizens of Augusta during the street car strike, a matter which, as a lawyer, he should not admit of a full history of that wretched massacre. But as surely as God lives, the militia, who ruthlessly killed unarmed and peaceful citizens down in cold blood, are guilty of manslaughter.

"The law only gives the militia the right to arrest their fellow citizens violating an order, and only made the party thus intentionally violating same, guilty of a misdemeanor. The brutal murder of the unsuspecting citizens was murder, at least voluntary manslaughter, even if they were willfully crossing an order. Indeed, even Governor Brown approved the farcical findings of the military court (?), which, of course, promptly acquitted their guilty confreres, and in exulting says in his speech that, hereafter, people will see that the militia are not 'tin soldiers.'

"Nothing in this whole wretched speech shows more convincingly Governor Brown's true bent of mind than this laudation of half-crooked, irresponsible militia. Governor Brown is another Glasscock, of West Virginia, types of men who would violate federal and state constitutions by exalting the military above the civil powers. He would substitute military rule for civil government, running ruthlessly counter to the very spirit and letter of republican institutions.

"The act of 1912 is the most insidiously dangerous piece of legislation ever enacted in Georgia. The first bloody fruits of such legislation were made terribly manifest at Augusta. What locality will suffer next?

Should Investigate Augusta Strike.

"The Augusta massacre should be investigated by a legislative committee.

"A national guard, properly created and used in subservience to the civil power, and mainly held to repel a foreign foe, is worthy of all respect and the full support of the people. There are thousands of gallant and patriotic men and officers in the national guard who themselves deplore this grievous blot and bullets, regulating their ballots during reconstruction days.

"We of the south, laborers and capitalists alike, and other classes of citizens, are of good old American stock, a homogeneous people, sons of revolutionary sires, people who won't submit to military ascendancy over the civil authorities.

"In conclusion, we beg to say that while organized labor has its faults (what institution or organization has not?), it is the only practical method yet devised by man which measurably protects and uplifts the working classes, and until some better plan be devised it will continue to be the greatest power for good to the toilers of the civilized world.

"And it has no apologies to make to the Browns and Fosts and Airbys, and Farrys, and others who let their spleen becloud their judgments and embitter their hearts.

LOBBYING DEFENDED BY JAMES E. WATSON

Man Accused by Mulhall Says "Interests" Ought to Be Represented.

Columbus, Ohio, July 12.—Business interests have a right to be represented at Washington, but would not need to maintain a lobby there if the tariff board is kept up, argued ex-Congressman James E. Watson, of Indiana, the principal speaker at today's annual outing of the Buckeye Republican club, who referred to the lobby investigation by the senate committee, before which he will be a witness this week by his own request. He did not mention Colonel Mulhall, whose published correspondence referred to him.

"I plead for business to go on and do business in this country," he said. "There had to be a shaking up. Roosevelt came along at the right time. He was a castor oil statesman. But he wanted the nation to take castor oil all the time. But now give honest business a chance. Don't keep hammering and hammering. Don't keep it unsettled. Don't be iconoclastic, to smash something. Over the American temple is written today 'Soak him.' I am being investigated myself. That is a personal matter. I didn't do anything wrong.

"American business has a right to be represented at Washington, honestly represented," he said. "Men wouldn't need to go to Washington to give congress data for making schedules if a tariff board was kept at work. I never knew a corrupt man in congress, one who sold, or would sell his vote for money," he said.

He attacked the democratic method of making a tariff bill by caucus decree. "President Wilson at Indianapolis, in the first speech of his I heard, said there was no necessity for secrecy in congressional proceedings, yet there was such secrecy in making a tariff bill as in the case of the Underwood bill, now the Simmons bill. In President Wilson's book 'The New Freedom,' page 172, he says, 'there is no excuse for caucusing congress.' Yet for the first time in the history of tariff making a party caucus has been called, forcibly to bind every senator to vote for the tariff bill, just as it comes from the committee, without change or amendment. Theory at Princeton is one thing and practice at Washington another thing."

The former republican floor leader of the house invited the progressives; "Come back home. Here's where you belong."

FORMER STORY TRUE, SAYS NEGRO SWEEPER

Jim Conley Declares Testimony That He Has Made No New Admissions.

Jim Conley, the negro sweeper, who was reached for a moment by newspaper reporters last night, reiterated his former story and declared positively that he had made no new statement of admission.

The police have taken special pains to keep Jim secluded from reporters. Early Saturday night they managed to find him in a cell in "Drunkards' Row." He answered a few questions put to him, and seemed very willing to talk.

MIXING OF COTTONS COSTLY FOR GROWERS

Practice of Certain American Ginners Protested by English Mill Men.

Washington, July 12.—Secretary Houston, of the department of agriculture, received a protest today from the Manchester (England) Cotton association against the practice certain American ginners have of mixing various staple cottons in the same bale.

"You will appreciate," says the letter of protest, "the serious consequences that this growing practice must have upon the quality of the American crop, thereby effectively reducing its monetary value."

Secretary Houston is urged to make representation to the cotton exchanges of the south, asking them to inform the ginners of the necessity of keeping different seed cottons of various staples separate and not gin different qualities together.

At the department it was pointed out that the trouble was due largely to the disinclination of the American ginner to take the time after ginning one kind of cotton to clean out the ginning machine before he introduces another staple. It was said that the value of a bale is often lessened from $1.50 to $4 by a resultant mixture of grades.

It is pointed out that cotton merchants sample from each side of the bale and rate it by the worst side, so that the mixture of cotton in the first layer of a bale would result in such a bale being rated "mixed," whereas probably only ten or twenty pounds of it might be mixed staple. Even if the second run of cotton is short staple, it loses in value by having the first layer mixed with any other kind.

The department urges particularly upon cotton growers to limit their cotton growing to one variety, or else provide themselves with seed cotton storage houses in which cotton of a single staple is stored. Where storage houses are used, the cotton producer can take a large quantity at one time to the gin and be certain it will not be mixed with previous runs. Where, however, he takes only a small quantity of cotton at a time, all these bales may have a first layer of mixed cotton.

It also urges upon cotton producers that if they cannot provide themselves with seed cotton storage houses and gin large quantities at a time, to insist that the ginners clean out the ginning machine and take the old roll of previous cotton out before ginning new cotton. This would probably cost the ginner a loss of time of about $10 a day, but where frequent chances in cotton are run, the losses to the producers may well amount to $50 or more a day.

The presence of a mixed first layer in cotton bales is found particularly serious in times when cotton is plentiful. When cotton is scarce, cotton merchants are not so particular, but when cotton is plentiful, they use the presence of a mixed layer as a weapon to lower the price paid for the entire bale. The loss to the producer in this way is very heavy.

HIGH COST OF LIVING FELT BY UNCLE SAM

Washington, July 12.—The continued high cost of living is reflected in a report today to Sherman Allen, assistant secretary of the treasury, by the government's general supply committee on the contracts it has let for supplies for the executive department of Washington for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

This barometer of the trend of prices shows that the cost of groceries and household supplies has increased 15 per cent as compared with last year, lumber 10 per cent, fuel and ice 7 per cent and dry goods 5 per cent.

While these essentials are soaring the report showed decreases in the prices of the following: Forage, flour and feed, 20 per cent; paints and oil, 12 per cent; hardware, 7 per cent; and furniture, stationery and electrical and engineering supplies, 5 per cent each.

These articles were stationery, drugs and chemicals, laboratory apparatus, photographic supplies, engraving and printing supplies and incandescent gas lamp supplies.

Educators Select St. Paul.

Salt Lake City, July 12.—The National Education association will meet in St. Paul in 1914, its board of directors decided today.

HERBERT MYRICK WILL ADDRESS LEGISLATORS

By special invitation from the Georgia senate and house, Herbert Myrick, of Springfield, Mass., will on Tuesday at noon, July 15, address a joint session of these bodies on the subject of "Co-operation Finance and Rural Credits in the Cotton Belt."

Mr. Myrick is president and editor-in-chief of the five Orange Judd agricultural weeklies, as well as of Farm and Home, and through his farm papers he has each month an audience of nearly a million and a half. He has for the past several years made annual trips to Germany to give close study to the co-operative banking systems which have worked out so successfully there, and he is also the author of a book, "Co-operative Finance," which has been received most favorably by farmers, bankers and merchants. In addition to the legislators, the Ad Men's Club of Atlanta will attend the lecture in a body, and seats have been reserved in the galleries for the public.

ABEL JAMES IS DEAD OF PARALYTIC STROKE

Macon, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Abel James, residing in Jones county near Gray, who was for many years extensively engaged in railroad building and saw mill operations throughout south Georgia, died today at noon from a stroke of paralysis. He was 74 years of age.

Mr. James leaves three brothers, B. W. James, of Macon; Henry James, of Ashburn, and C. P. James, of Bibb county; also two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Drew and Mrs. Jim James, of Macon. The following children survive: B. J. James, of Kite; T. J. James, of Americus; Lee James, Jones county; Mrs. E. A. Roberts, Roberts; Mrs. W. J. Slocum, Macon; Mrs. W. E. McArthur, Quitman; Mrs. E. F. Cranford, Twiggs county; Mrs. F. A. Baggett, Macon; Mrs. Howard Countryman, Americus, and the Misses Helen and Ruth James, of Jones county.

MYERS KILLED HIMSELF BECAUSE OF OVERWORK

St. Louis, Mo., July 12.—(Special.)—Mrs. Pearl Myers, widow of Charles L. Myers, who found the body of her husband at the Planters' hotel here yesterday, six hours after he committed suicide, was unable to attend the inquest today. She is prostrated at the home of her husband's uncle, Dr. Heine Marks. A suicide verdict was returned.

Myers was general contracting agent of the Cumberland Telephone company, and has headquarters in Atlanta, Ga., and lived with his wife, a bride of six months, at Nashville, Tenn. The body was shipped to Nashville tonight, where the funeral will be held.

At the inquest today a brother of the dead man, H. C. Myers, testified Myers had been in ill health several weeks. He said there was no financial trouble entering into Myers suicide; that it was simply a case of overwork.

SMUGGLED NECKLACE IS SOLD AT AUCTION

Chicago, July 12.—The diamond necklace which belonged to Jack Johnson's former white wife, Etta Duryea, was sold to a jeweler today for $2,160 at public auction.

As appraised by government officials the necklace is valued at $3,040, although Johnson bought it in London for $1,950.

Johnson's wife wore the necklace soon after their return to the United States. Custom officials investigated. Johnson was unable to show proper entry and the necklace was seized. The fighter claimed his wife had smuggled it into this country without his knowledge.

The duty on the circlet would have been about $1,000. It is composed of 55 white diamonds ranging in weight from 1 7-8 karats to 1-4 karat.

EVEN WATER DENIED TO SILK MILL STRIKERS

Paterson, N. Y., July 12.—Paterson's silk mill workers' strike developed serious complication today with the suspension of the water supply in houses of hundreds of idle families. Many landlords have carried tenants for months without rent, meantime meeting water bills. Now that they have balked at this and shut off the water, the situation in many sections is acute. Health authorities fear an epidemic.

The health department has ordered that all property owners turn on the water within forty-eight hours.

AFTERNOON DAILY WILL BE PRINTED IN GRIFFIN

First Issue of The Griffin Georgian Will Make Appearance About September 1.

Griffin, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Preparations are now in progress for the publication of an afternoon daily paper here, the first issue to make its appearance on September 1. The leading promoters of the paper, it is understood, are Colonel T. E. Patterson, Colonel C. G. Mills, Colonel W. H. Taylr, who will be editor-in-chief, and Claire Deane, who is to be city editor. The new afternoon sheet will bear the name, "The Griffin Georgian," and will be a four-page affair, except on Sundays, when additional pages will be used. It is said that a contract will be made with a news service for connection, that latest developments may be chronicled. The backers of the new paper say that the greatest encouragement has been given them in their enterprise, and every assurance afforded that the venture will be a success.

PASTOR TO CLAP DOWN LID AT MOUNT ZION CAMPMEETING

Griffin, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—If Rev. Thomas M. Elliott, the pastor in charge of the Mount Zion campmeeting, carries out his plans this year he will surely put on the lid good and tight at the campground during the meeting this summer. During recent years no little annoyance has been experienced by the leaders of the meeting by the managers of the public tent, where lunches and soft drinks were sold. Especially has this been true on Sundays, when the largest crowds assembled.

This year it is proposed by Mr. Elliott to eliminate the public tent altogether, and especially to forbid the buying and selling of soft drinks on the Sabbath day. Such practice has been of serious interference with the spiritual success of the meeting heretofore, and has become of such proportion as that the grand jury took the matter under consideration. At the present time several Spalding county merchants are under a kind of probation as to the selling of soft drinks on Sunday.

MAN IS BURIED 11 MONTHS AFTER HE DIED BY OWN HAND

Griffin, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—It seldom happens in the career of a preacher to bury a man eleven months after he has died, and to let that burial be the second one that was given the remains; but such was the experience of Rev. J. C. Adams, of this place, one day this week. Rev. Adams was called upon to bury the remains of one L. J. Brown, who had August committed suicide near East St. Louis, Ill., and whose remains were exhumed and brought here for retirement. Upon the death of her husband, Mrs. Brown came here to live with his people. Later, deciding to go to Wheeling, W. Va., she gave order to Exhume the body and ship it here. Much trouble was experienced in getting the health authorities to consent for the remains to be shipped in such a condemned state. A solid metal casket and box was used, and no ill effects were observed. At the weird funeral, conducted here, flowers and other tokens of grief were in evidence.

BASEBALL IS STUDIED BY RUSSIAN TEACHERS

New York, July 12.—The sixty visiting Russian teachers who lately arrived here have eagerly taken up the study of American baseball. As guests of the Merchants' association they witnessed the Chicago-New York game yesterday, after having sat up late the night before to hear their interpreter lecture on the fine points of the great American pastime.

The interpreter, Boris Maruchess, sat in the midst of the party at the Polo grounds and in addition to keeping a careful box score in English, as he is a thorough baseball enthusiast, he explained the plays. His countrymen and countrywomen seemed to enjoy the game immensely.

One young woman was eager to know why the players "chatter" all the time, putting the question as she pointed to a New Yorker who was doing vociferous coaching on the base lines. Another woman teacher, seeing one of the players run back to second when the ball beat him to third, wanted to know if it was not considered disgraceful for a man to retreat from his goal and fall short of his ideal in the sight of all.

"Look at that sly fellow," exclaimed one sharp-eyed girl when Doyl stole third. When she spoiled it all by asking:

"What means the strikes have two and the balls have one? I thought they were the New Yorks and the Chicagos."

FLINT RIVER BAPTISTS MEET IN GRIFFIN TODAY

Griffin, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—A meeting of widespread importance to be held in Griffin Monday will be the pastors' conference of the Flint River Baptist association, which is to convene in the First Baptist church at 10 o'clock. The laymen of the association are invited to be present and it is likely about a hundred Baptists will be in attendance.

Rev. J. E. Sammons, pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, will preside over the pastors' meeting, while J. P. Nichols, Sr., also of Griffin, will have charge of the deliberations of laymen. One of the chief topics both bodies will consider at this time will be the physical improvement of the Locust Grove institute, which is located in the territory of the Flint River association, and which is under the jurisdiction of the Baptists. It is proposed to raise a sum of $10,000 for improving the buildings and making other improvements there.

HE KILLS WATCHMAN, BUT GETS NO BOOTY

Colorado Springs, Colo., July 12.—A masked man who tried to hold up the night clerk at the Cliff House, a fashionable summer hotel at Manitou, early today, shot and killed Night Watchman C. Whitehead and escaped to the hills.

Walking past a number of guests on the porch and in the outer lobby, the bandit, shortly before 1 o'clock this morning, covered Night Clerk Casson and Night Watchman Whitehead with a revolver and ordered them behind the counter. Whitehead tried to escape through a cloak room door but a bullet from the bandit's gun killed him. The shot roused the late guests and without attempting to secure any money or valuables, the bandit rushed through an outer door, jumping a high porch railing and disappeared. A posse is in pursuit.

Our Deferred Payment Plan an Easy Way to Buy a Diamond

We believe the secret of many a man's success lies in having formed the habit of meeting some obligation each month.

With no special object for which to save a young man is apt to live up to his income. If you have a diamond note to meet won't it keep you from spending money for trifling things of no value?

At the end of the diamond contract you will be the value of the diamond better off. The money would have been spent anyway, and you would have had nothing to show for it?

The advance in diamonds is due to increase in demand and falling off in the quantity being found each year.

Mining is much more difficult and far more expensive. The DeBeers Mining Company has reached such a distance under the surface that laborers can live only a few hours at a time in the intense heat.

Another fact tends to raise the price of diamonds—the high-grade material decreases the further the mines are worked into.

The syndicates are forced to limit the output and there can be but one result—constant increase in price.

Let us explain personally our terms and prices on diamonds. We are never too busy to give you courteous attention whether you are ready to buy or merely seek information.

Our partial payment plans are attractive and convenient and lots of good business people are using them.

Call or write for our Diamond Book No. 7.

WHERE GEORGIA'S WAYWARD BOYS ARE CARED FOR—

How State Reformatory Is "Working to Save the Boys That May Save the State"

By E. A. Tigner.

Milledgeville, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Although the state reformatory, for the care of young offenders against the law, has probably attracted less attention than any of the other institutions of the state, the records of the reformatory show that since its establishment in 1906 wonderful work has been accomplished towards making good citizens of boys, both white and black, who, if they had not been sent to the reformatory, would probably have become members of the criminal class.

The institution, which is situated just outside the city limits of Milledgeville, began its existence seventeen years ago in a manner rather meager, as only a small sum was appropriated by the state for its establishment. Only one building was constructed and in it were housed both white and black youths.

Such an arrangement was always unsatisfactory. It soon became overcrowded and also so obnoxious to the better sentiment in the state that a separate building was provided for the negro boys.

From the beginning judges all over the state have been sending the young offenders against the law here and today there are nearly two hundred boys in the reformatory, about seventy of these being white boys.

No state institution has made more rapid progress than has the reformatory during the seven years of its existence in approaching the ideals for which it was established. Day by day, as the public mind is becoming more alive to the needs and benefits of this kind of work, the evolution or development of reformatory work is easily noticeable. Where years ago there were obstacles and criticisms, today there is interest and encouragement.

Industrial Trade Shops.

Under Superintendent Lovvorn, who is studious, inventive and a man of broad scope, the institution is making forward steps in many directions.

Particularly worthy of mention is the starting of industrial trade shops. This commenced in a very primitive way by first setting up an old cast-off anvil on a block in the back yard with the sky for a roof and the four winds for walls. With an improvised bellows and forge and such makeshift tools as could be had the boys began their first lesson in elementary blacksmithing and simple rough wood work.

This crude beginning instituted by Superintendent Lovvorn and his boys when seen by the state authorities enlisted their interest and since then there has been erected a rude workshop with pretty fair equipment. Numbers of the boys are making rapid progress in the different lines of work in manual training. Under the guidance of the foremen they do very creditably all the wood work and blacksmithing for the institution.

Here, also, they have beginners in shoe repairing, sign lettering, painting, barber work, tanning hides, bottoming chairs, etc. This feature of reformatory work, teaching industrial trades as a means of awakening the latent talents and ambitions of idle and wayward youth, is strongly urged by all students of sociology and is firmly believed in by Superintendent Lovvorn. He has made a real start in that direction, and if the state, through its general assembly, will make provision for the erection of some industrial trade buildings where the different kinds of shops can be maintained, the reformatory will be sending out some well-equipped boys in future years.

The state of Georgia, in the interests of society, has undertaken the watchcaring of the delinquents committed to this institution, and in simple justice these boys should be given an opportunity for development during the years of their detention.

Work and Study Alternated.

There are separate schools for white and colored boys in constant operation, taught by competent and experienced teachers. As boys are coming and going all the time at the reformatory, these schools run without vacation, the boys alternating between their study and work, and the result being a wholesome program. The school is about the usual grade school, giving instruction in the elementary branches of education, besides emphasizing particularly the importance of caring for health of the body, agriculture and civil government.

In the operation of the farm and gardens in connection with the institution all the boys are given a practical education in agriculture. The raising and storing of all forage and feed stuffs for the upkeep of farm mules and the herd of milk cows is all done by the boys as well as all the other farm work.

Religion and Moral Training.

It is the endeavor of the management of the reformatory to make the atmosphere surrounding the juvenile prisoners distinctly moral and elevating and particular encouragement is given to religious habits.

The good people of Milledgeville are endeavoring to do their part by this institution located near them, and many phases of work in connection with the reformatory are receiving the attention of some philanthropic person or organization.

Particularly noteworthy is the work organized by John Sibley, a young attorney of this city. A year or more ago he, as superintendent, began a Sunday school, and his corps of teachers, consecrated Bible scholars of different denominations, including prominent business men and members of both faculties of the Georgia Normal and Industrial college and the Georgia Military college, have worked with him, freely giving their time and energies to this interesting work. By their aid a fund was raised and a piano purchased and placed in the Sunday school room.

The Sunday school work is eagerly entered into by the boys. At a recent union meeting of the Sunday schools of Milledgeville Colonel Sibley's reformatory boys won prizes for the best recitation in concert from memory of the Commandments and Psalms.

Entertainment for Boys.

Numerous things are done for their pleasure and entertainment. The manager of the moving picture theater in Milledgeville has been exceedingly thoughtful and has extended an invitation to see gratis one selected picture show each month. This kindness is accepted by the boys and is much enjoyed.

There is a plan on foot for providing by popular subscription a scholarship for one year in the Georgia Military college to be awarded to the boy who leaves the institution with the best all-round record for the year. The culmination of this plan is practically assured by the same loyal and generous spirit of the people of Milledgeville.

Superintendent Lovvorn is very anxious to install a printing shop with modest equipment and facilities for the printing by the boys of a monthly paper. Such is usually one of the equipments of a reformatory. It also adds another feature to the list of avocations taught.

Efficient Officers in Charge.

The institution has been fortunate in its officers. The first superintendent and matron were Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin T. Bethune. Under their administration the place was settled, a great deal of grading, building and planning necessary for the development of a new place was done. The population of the institution during its early days was small, but gradually growing larger. Mrs. Bethune acted as matron and established schools for the teaching of the boys.

Two years ago Joseph E. Lovvorn, of Cedartown, became superintendent and Mrs. Lovvorn, his wife, matron.

A STATE'S GREAT WORK

By E. A. TIGNER.

It took a long time for the state to start at the right end of the matter of how to treat its criminal class with respect to making out of such offenders better men and useful citizens.

In this present day of our civilization no one will go so far as to say that imprisonment and punishment of offenders against law and society is unnecessary, but the idea is growing and is growing very fast that the state should look more toward plans and methods of reforming and correcting evil tendencies in prisoners than toward the punishment of them and the using of them for mere revenue benefits.

Strange that in a democracy such as we boast of it was not sooner realized that in order to continue and to preserve the republic in its purity for a long and useful life it is absolutely necessary to use every effort to make a good citizen of every man, criminal or otherwise. It is not so necessary for the preservation of governments such as monarchies, autocracies and other centralized forms that the individual be so educated and morally trained for self government as in a republic.

It is only in recent years that much thought has been given to the betterment of men suffering imprisonment. But through the influence of organizations such as prison improvement associations a great reformation is being steadily worked out.

This constant movement that is on throughout the land to make better characters out of prisoners first of all rather than to have them serve penal servitude and to reap revenue from their labors is brought to our notice by such criticisms as made by the recent Westchester grand jury on the famous Sing Sing prison, the jury recommending that more attention be given to moral character training and healthy, humane treatment of the inmates of that prison. Also by the recent utterances of Philip Weltner, secretary of the Prison Association of Georgia, who characterizes the state's present prison system as "an iniquity of the basest sort," because in the operation of the system but little thought has been given to the betterment of men, only the building of roads and other public work has been considered.

While all this concern is felt for the welfare of grown-up prisoners, some doubting that much reformation can be brought about in them, there is one line of reform work that gains universal approval, this being the work among young criminals and the establishment of well-equipped reformatories for this accomplishment. The accompanying story tells of what Georgia is doing along this line.

LACK OF $35,000 MAY LOSE $100,000

Tech Must Erect New Building or Lose Large Amount of Very Valuable Equipment.

It is not often that a $100,000 gift is turned down on account of the absence of a place to keep the gift, but such will necessarily be the action of the Georgia School of Technology if the Georgia legislature refuses to donate $35,000 for the purpose of erecting a power station plant at the Tech in which to keep approximately a hundred thousand dollars' worth of the very latest and most modern machinery which has been offered to the school with the only condition that the appliances shall be properly housed.

In view of the fact that the board of trustees of the University of Georgia has decided not to ask for any additional appropriations, but only for a sufficient maintenance fund for the various state institutions, the School of Technology is faced by an enigma, the solution to which has not been solved. Of course after the action of the trustees the Tech will not ask for the necessary appropriation to erect the new building which they had expected to receive from the present legislature, and the only way to get the amount will be to have it thrust upon them by the general assembly of the state without making any pleas or prayers. The millenium has not yet arrived and the legislature has never been known to seize upon opportunities to make unrequested donations to anybody or anything.

The situation as it now exists is pitiable. The school now has the same power plant which it erected when the attendance at the institute was only one-fourth of the present enrollment and building, machinery and every other facility of the station is now outgrown, out-of-date and entirely inadequate for a position at the Tech, which has made such strident advances in the last ten years in every line of instruction.

Plans Already Prepared.

So certain were the authorities of the Tech that the state would be willing to pay $35,000 for a building with all the modern equipment of the best technical schools in the country, for which the other state technical institutes would and have spent over $150,000, the authorities proceeded to have the plans drawn for the proper housing of the machinery which had been offered to them gratis.

P. V. Stephens, a graduate of the Tech and a consulting engineer of New York city, draughted the complete plans for the new building, giving approximately $5,000 worth of his time to his alma mater. These plans were supervised by the engineers of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway company, of which George G. Crawford, the first graduate of Tech, is president. They were also revised by the engineers of the Willis-Babcock company, of New York, and other concerns and are absolutely the very latest word in the question of power stations.

The plans call for a building of brick with cement floors and steel roof and absolutely fireproof. The length of the structure is 113 feet and the proposed location is directly behind the present textile building, where a site was purchased for the erection of the power station two years ago. The site is peculiarly adapted to the erection of such a plant, and it is so situated that invisible coal bunkers could be constructed which would hold 2,000 tons of coal. The most efficient method of handling both the coal and the ashes would be installed.

"In fact," stated President K. G. Matheson, "an engineer of international repute has told me that it would be the most efficient and complete station in America."

Offered by Manufacturing Concerns.

The presidents of six great multi-millionaire manufacturing companies have offered the machinery for the steam department, and this equipment would amount to $60,000. Other concerns have practically promised between thirty and forty thousand dollars' worth of equipment for the hydraulic, gas and other departments.

President Matheson declined to divulge the names of the concerns who had donated the machinery, at their request. "If their names were to be published now," said President Matheson, "they would be overwhelmed with requests from other institutions for the same gifts and the companies have absolutely refused to give any other institution such an offer. Of all the institutions in the south these millionaire concerns have chosen the Georgia Tech as the one most worthy of their machinery.

"Of course you understand," said the president, "that these gifts are not absolutely charity, but more or less of a business proposition, for you see with the Tech training about 700 engineers annually these companies' machinery in our building would be a great advertisement for them.

"Now if we fail to get the building to accommodate this machinery it will mean that we will jeopardize, if not lose, the friendship and interest of these millionaires who have developed an interest in the school."

Suggests More Normal Courses In Church Colleges for Girls

By Dumas Malone, Professor of Bible and Education, Andrew College, Cuthbert, Ga.

The most hopeful of modern educational tendencies is the "back to life" movement. With the growing consciousness on the part of educators that the school must prepare for life has come a marked growth on the part of those institutions which prepare for some specific phase or phases of life. Witness the growth of the technical and normal schools.

He is no wild fanatic who says that boys and girls ought to be prepared by the schools for that work which they are to do in the world. If the majority of the graduates of the woman's college teach, whether in the school or in the homes over which they preside, the colleges ought to prepare them to teach. If most women have intimate relations with a home, they ought to learn something of how a home should be ordered and directed.

This feeling that the girls of today ought to receive such definite training to be the women of tomorrow has led to the instituting in our colleges of courses with this aim in view. And it has led, furthermore, to the establishment of a distinct class of institutions which are usually called normal and industrial schools.

In one sense of the word, it is rather strange, that all the school of this type, or at least all with which the writer is acquainted, have been established and maintained by the state. Some church colleges for women offer courses in normal training and home economics, but they lay prime emphasis upon general and, as it may be called classical education. It seems rather unfortunate that such should have been the case for there are reasons why the church should enter this field of education.

Competition Is Growing.

For one thing there is now considerable competition between church schools, even between those belonging to the same denomination. This is inevitable where institutions stress the same line of work. To be specific, should they all aim at the performance of the classical college requirements, there would be of necessity considerable competition between the three Methodist colleges for women in Georgia—Wesleyan, LaGrange and Andrew. And, indeed, there has been such competition in the past. In view of the fact that these institutions are backed by the same church and that competition would tend to engender ill feeling in the denomination, and in view of the fact that they have largely the same ideals and purposes, such competition would be exceedingly unfortunate. Doubtless similar instances might be found among the colleges of other churches.

Another reason why it would be advisable for the church to enter this field of education is that there is now more demand for this type of training than the state is able to supply. The number of girls who are turned away each year by the Georgia Normal and Industrial college at Milledgeville is proof enough of this. Not only is there now this great demand, but there is going to be each year a greater one. Training for service in the home is yet in the early stages of its development and the training of women for self-sustaining work is yet rather a novelty in our state at any rate. So it would be a good work for some of the church colleges to get under the load and help the over-burdened state institutions carry it on.

There are, furthermore, many parents who desire for their daughters the atmosphere of a church school, and who, yet, wish for them training of the type which I have indicated. As it is now, there is no school which will satisfy them. If a girl is sent to a state school, she will miss that special religious atmosphere and special religious attention which her parents wish for her; if she is sent to a church-school, she will miss that special vocational training which they wish her to receive. So it seems reasonable to believe that a normal and industrial college conducted by a religious denomination would make a distinct appeal to a large class of patrons and pupils.

New Courses Offered.

In view of all this, it might be of interest to readers of The Constitution to know that Andrew college will offer next year a number of courses along the line of normal training and home economics. There is reason to believe, furthermore, that these lines will be stressed from this time forward. Some have even made the suggestion that the institution be made a normal and industrial college and such a thing is far from being impossible.

In any case, there is going to be a fuller recognition on the part of this and, I hope, on the part of other church institutions of the vital importance of this type of work.

Tails Grafted on Fishes by Japs.

(From The New York Press.)

Among the many interesting arts in which the Japanese excel is that of the making of fishtails. Almost every one has seen the bush-tailed goldfish, with its four, five and sometimes more long, wavy tails, but it is not generally known that most of them are not its own.

When the little goldfish are very, very young, their flesh is as clear as glass, so that one can see every bone in their tiny bodies. At this time the few that are born with two or more tails are put by themselves, and then a queer-looking old Jap, with a great magnifying glass fastened in front of his eye and wee sharp tools handy, reaches down under the water and cuts off the tails of the plain little fish, and then three or four of these tails are joined on to the backbone where the one was cut off and fastened there with tiny bandages until they grow fast.

The Japanese, who are very skillful in queer things of this kind, grow the finest goldfish in the world and it is a very good business for very fine fish of the kind often bring as much as $500 to $500, and one sold not long ago for $1,000.

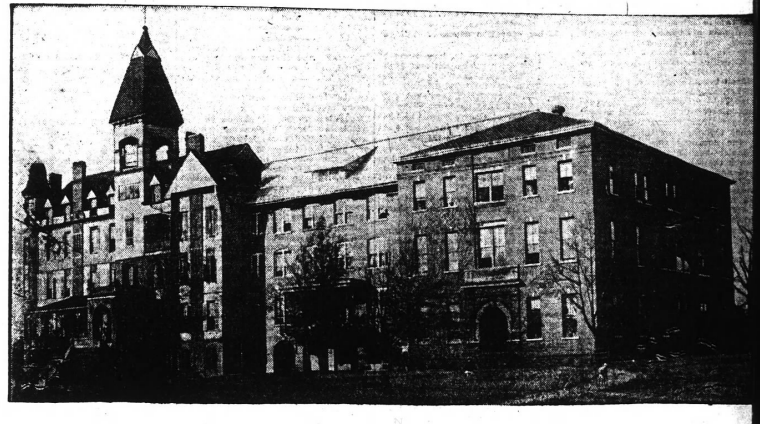
ANDREW COLLEGE

A DEMOCRATIC, CHRISTIAN HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS



The grounds of the college comprise twelve acres, and are attractively located at one of the highest points in Cuthbert.

The three buildings are modern and comfortable, being equipped with steam heat, waterworks, electric lights, electric bells and inter-communicating telephones. $20,000 has been expended within the past year for improvements.

Cuthbert is 526 feet above the sea level, the highest point in South Georgia, and the healthfulness of the town is exceptional. The health record of the college household is almost perfect.

The courses of study in literary and special departments are in keeping with modern tendencies in education, and are under the direction of teachers who are thoroughly qualified for their work. Courses in home economics and normal training are a feature. The officers and teachers number 17.

The cost is low, ranging from $178 to $196 for board, tuition and general fees. Additional charge is made for music, art and expression.

The president, his family, and all except one of the teachers live in the college home. All know all the pupils by name and take a personal interest in each. Since the boarding patronage is limited to 120, real home life is possible.

The spirit of the school is democratic and the atmosphere is Christian in a true sense. It is a wholesome place for a girl to live and grow in.

Tebault-Harper.

Of the marriage of Miss Corinne Tebault, of New Orleans, and Mr. Howard Vance Harper, the bride, the granddaughter of the late David G. Bailey, of Griffin, The Picayune of New Orleans has the following story:

A marriage of wide social interest was that of Miss Corinne Tebault, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. Hamilton Tebault, to Mr. Howard Vance Harper, which was quietly celebrated on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at Trinity Episcopal church, the bride also having been christened and having received her confirmation at the same altar.

The wedding, at which only relatives of the two immediate families were present, was one characterized by quiet simplicity in all its details. The bride, one of New Orleans' most beautiful and charming young women, was escorted to the altar by her father, who gave her to be married. She wore a chic coat suit of dark blue brocaded silk poplin, with lace waist and dark blue hat trimmed with dark blue wings and carried lavender orchids. There were no attendants on either the bride or bridegroom. Rev. Dr. Robert S. Coupland, rector of Trinity, performed the ceremony. There was no reception following, the bridal pair leaving from the church for the train for a trip of two months to the west, but the greatest amount of interest was felt in the social world in the marriage, the bride being one of the most popular young women in New Orleans.

She is a member of a distinguished family connection throughout the south and is the daughter of one of the south's most gallant soldiers of the confederacy. In addition to her social graces she is a talented writer and reader and is a great student. Besides her literary gifts she possesses a charming personality and is widely known and has been feted in the social world of a dozen southern cities.

Mr. Harper, the bridegroom, is formerly from Chester, Pa., but is a member of the old and distinguished Harper family of Maryland, the original members having come from England and settled there in 1620. He has resided in New Orleans for the past seven years and has made his home at the Hotel De Soto with his mother, Mrs. S. Y. Harper, where he and his bride will reside on their return from their wedding trip.

LEGISLATORS SEE AT ATHENS WHAT UNIVERSITY NEEDS

BARBECUE TO BE MADE ANNUAL EVENT IN CITY

Chancellor Barrow Says All That Is Expected From the State This Year Is Good Will.

By T. B. Conner, Staff Correspondent.

Athens, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Whatever the legislature may find itself able to do for the state university this year, it is certain that the city of Athens left nothing undone that it could do for the legislature today.

With 225 members of the general assembly and their friends on board, the special train of Athens chamber of commerce, which left Atlanta at shortly after 8 o'clock this morning, rolled into Athens promptly on time at 11 o'clock, eastern time, and was greeted by several hundred Athens citizens, who devoted the entire day to showing the visitors a good time.

Street cars, automobiles and any other modes of conveyance available were placed at their service. The rain, which was pouring down when the train left the capital, had ceased when Athens was reached, and the day was an ideal one for enjoyment. With a brass band to furnish music and the Barnes-McClatchey quartet to furnish topical songs, there was nothing lacking to keep the crowd in the liveliest of humor.

From the station the members of the legislature, headed by President Randolph Anderson, of the state senate, were taken in cars to the State Normal school, about a mile out on Prince avenue.

They were assembled in the auditorium and addressed for a few minutes by President Jere M. Pound.

After that Mr. Pound took them over the buildings and gave them ocular demonstration that all he had been telling them as to the needs of the institution was true. The impression made upon the solons was a fine one and it may be said that the normal school, which has in recent years been pretty badly neglected, will receive first consideration when the legislature begins to hand appropriations out this year. They recognized the fact that here the common school teachers of the state were made and that improvement of the common schools must begin here.

The Barbecue.

After the inspection of the normal school the visiting party was taken to the warehouse of the Southern Cotton mills, where a splendid barbecue was ready to be served. Thanks to the efficiency of D. P. Hazleton, who has established a reputation in this part of the state as a 'cue man; C. C. Callaway, secretary of the Athens chamber of commerce, and their able assistants on the chamber directorate, there was no waiting. Everything was pulled off by the clock and there was nothing lacking in the way of eatables and potables to supply the wants of the inner man.

There was no need of a demonstration that Georgia legislators have good appetites, but if there had been it would have been supplied. Suffice to say that the guests did full justice to all that they found, and went away well satisfied to. For the milder members there was buttermilk in great abundance from the college of agriculture dairy farm, and for those whose thirsts needed a little different sort of beverage to quench—well, an enterprising western concern had spent some months perfecting a soft drink which was labeled "the Georgia Legislature Brew."

The College of Agriculture.

When the feast was over, cars were again in readiness to take the guests to the State College of Agriculture farm, where they were shown the remarkable work of Dr. A. M. Soule and his co-workers in transforming an abandoned plantation, given up a few years ago as almost worthless, into a model demonstration farm.

The visitors seemed specially interested in the work of the department of animal industry. They were shown as fine a herd of cattle as there is in the state, both for beef and dairy purposes, and the merits of each breed were explained by Prof. M. P. Jarnigan. The Percheron stallion and brood mares, demonstrating the possibilities of horse-raising in Georgia, also came in for a good share of attention.

After the legislature had completed its inspection of the agricultural college by a tour of the main building, its members were taken to the campus of the old university proper, the parent of all the branches.

Look for Good Will This Year.

They were assembled in front of the chapel, one of the few buildings on the campus, which the old former students recognized as unchanged since their college days, and given a brief talk by Chancellor Barrow, who explained the purpose of the chamber of commerce in providing the entertainment and also the uses of the various surrounding buildings which were to be inspected in turn.

Chancellor Barrow said that the university realized that the financial condition of the state would not permit of the expenditure of much money this year, and that all it was asking of the legislature was its good will. He felt that the institution, was, at least, deserving of the good will of the general assembly both for its past history and its present service.

In conclusion, the chancellor reminded the legislators that the institution was the property of the people of Georgia, democratic to the core, because it belonged to all of the people and was working in the interest of all and not for any class or faction. He wanted them to regard it as the property of the people and to treasure it as such.

Thanks Athens and University.

When Chancellor Barrow had finished, Representative S. E. Berry, of Whitfield, moved a vote of thanks to the officers of the university and the chamber of commerce, of Athens, for the splendid entertainment that had been furnished, which was adopted amid a round of cheers.

James M. Smith, the veteran northeast Georgia farmer, was called upon to respond in behalf of the people of Athens and the neighboring counties. He thanked the legislators for the appreciation they had shown and the interest displayed in the work of the institution, contrasting the present general good will with the period when he served in the general assembly, at which time the very mention of the name of the university was a signal for hisses on the floor of the house, he said.

The crowd was entertained and kept in a good humor, while photographers were making ready to take its picture by the McClatchey quartet, the members of which are no less well-known citizens than Lee Barrow, B. B. McClatchey reading copy at the house of representatives; J. D. Price, commissioner of agriculture, and Representative Bullard, of Campbell county.

The program of the day was concluded with an inspection of the new Peabody library and other buildings on the campus.

An Annual Event.

So great a success did the chamber of commerce make of the day as a booster of Athens that it is very likely that they will make the event an annual one in the future, to be looked forward to by legislators with as much eagerness as the famous barbecues of Governor Slaton, when that official was a legislator himself.

The directors of the Athens Chamber of Commerce, who got up the affair are: Andrew C. Erwin, president; C. P. Flanigan and Martin J. Abney, vice presidents; C. D. Heidler, H. P. Hinton, L. C. Smith, H. H. Gordon, W. H. Shelton, John W. Morton, A. H. Sikes, E. J. Bondurant, D. G. Anderson and D. P. Hazleton.

The train was in charge of Fred Geissler, assistant general passenger agent of the Seaboard Air Line railroad, who made the trip in magnificent time.

Heat Very Trying to Women's Nerves

They Neglect Their Bowels and the Poisons Vitiate the Blood.

Hot weather has a very weakening effect on women. They are too languid to exercise, and as a result have appetite only for foods that seem light and tasty, such as salads and other cold concoctions. But these frequently produce indigestion, and with it comes constipation.

It is especially in hot weather that women should keep up the highest standard of health, for it is necessary to have strength to resist the heat. The first essentials are good digestion and regular bowel movement, and then good red blood and steady nerves will follow. The best way to obtain these is not by an over-indulgence in fruits, which often are not ripe, or over-ripe, and hence are dangerous, but in the use of a gentle and pleasant-tasting bowel stimulant like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Use it tonight and your constipation, indigestion and sick headaches will vanish by morning.

Mrs. Henry Moeller, 2948 Lee Ave., Chicago, uses it herself and gives it to her children, and Mrs. A. C. Caldwell, Denver, Colo., was once pale and sallow-looking, but now has a pretty complexion, and naturally they are great believers in the value of Syrup Pepsin as a seasonable laxative-tonic. It can be obtained of druggists at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, the latter size for family use. Its tonic properties make it an ideal laxative for women and children. You will never again use strong cathartics, purgatives and pills after trying Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Families wishing to try a free sample bottle can obtain it, postpaid, by addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 418 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

The Stronghold of The Blue Serge Suit

A Blue Serge Suit is to a man's summer outfit as bread is to his daily bill of fare. It "hits the spot" at any time of day, and serves as nothing else in summer evenings.

Your blue serge coat with a pair of white flannel trousers is about the most effective manner in which you might dress for summer afternoons or informal evenings.

Quality Counts, of course. It counts much in your favor in the good serges we commend to you. Don't get a fanciful viewpoint that you could buy here the serge that stretches and wobbles and wants to be pressed every twenty minutes to be acceptable in good society.

On the contrary, MUSE serges are of superfine quality, and they're styled and tailored in a strictly custom manner.

State Normal's Georgia Club Described by U. S. Bulletin

Athens, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—From the United States bureau of education has been just issued a bulletin entitled, "The Georgia club at the State Normal school, Athens, Ga., for the study of rural sociology."

The bulletin is a forty-eight page booklet which has been prepared and written by Professor E. C. Branson, professor of rural economics at the State Normal school, and incidentally editor in chief of the "Home and Farmstead," a weekly rural publication of this city. The government sent representatives to Athens to see the work of the Georgia club in actual progress; the department found that Athens had furnished another initial movement which is to result in great good—a system of state study which met the demands in every state.

The government not only sent men to Athens to study the work of the clubs first organized by Professor Branson but asked Mr. Branson to go to Washington and confer with the officials in charge of the bureau. The request was made for the exhaustive account of the Georgia club—and the report in this bulletin is full and highly interesting even to the casual reader—intensely interesting to the student of conditions.

FAILURE OF THE BANK DUE TO MISMANAGEMENT

Washington, July 12.—"The report of special examiners as to indications of criminal violations of law found in the closed First-Second National bank of Pittsburg is now in the course of preparation by examiners and will be referred to the department of justice as soon as completed," said Thomas F. Kane, acting comptroller of the currency, today.

Mr. Kane added that there was no doubt that the bank had been "grossly mismanaged," but that no conclusion had been reached as to who might be prosecuted for possible violations of law.

Lawrence O. Murray, former comptroller of the currency, who approved the merger of the First and Second banks, today issued a statement denying that any national bank examiner had ever reported to him that the First National's capital before the merger was impaired. Murray said when he became comptroller five years ago the First National was under criticism. He said he forced the bank to "charge off" one million and a quarter in losses and that just before the consolidation the institution charged off over $800,000 more.

WARE FARMERS' UNION MAY JOIN LABOR UNION

Decides to Co-operate With the Labor Assembly and Makes Plans for Affiliation.

Waycross, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—In executive session late today the Ware County Farmers' union and the local trade unions agreed to co-operate in their work in future, and while no affiliation was decided on at this meeting, a joint committee, consisting of an equal number of members from the Waycross Trades and Labor assembly and the County Farmers' union, was named to meet and consider plans for such action as soon as possible.

Charles S. Barrett, president of the National Farmers' union, attended the meeting and in a stirring address advocated such a course and very hearty approval. This step is a new one for both organizations, but has been attempted frequently in the past without the desired results.

CHILD LABOR IN SOUTH ATTACKED BY M'KELWAY

Seattle, Wash., July 12.—"Child labor is another name for family labor and it is unnecessary where the adult man is paid sufficient wages to support his family," declared A. J. McKelway, secretary of the national child labor committee for the southern states, at the closing session tonight of the national conference of Charities and Correction, which adjourned to meet in Memphis next July.

"Child labor systems tend to a sub-normal standard of living," said Mr. McKelway. "The wages of child workers in the great child employing communities are high enough to tempt the parents to send their children to work, while at the same time bringing down adult wages to the child's standard."

Out of 39,402 workers whose actual wages were copied from the pay roll of southern cotton mills, he said, "only 1,444 earned from $8 to $9 a week an one of these was a girl and one a boy under 12 years of age.

"We shall never reach a living wage for the individual worker in the child employing communities until such employment is everywhere prohibited by law," said Mr. McKelway.

HE FAVORS MOVIES ALL DAY SUNDAY

E. B. Lester Writes Letter Condemning Sensational Articles in Local Newspapers.

E. B. Lester, of the Kimball Piano company, is a strong advocate of Sunday moving pictures. He has written the following to The Constitution in which he voices his views and deprecates sensationalism in the newspapers:

Atlanta, Ga., July 12, 1913.

Atlanta Constitution: I have read with considerable interest the various articles in your paper concerning Atlanta's places of amusement, and would like to inquire (in all fairness and consideration of private individuals who receive revenue from such places) why it is that such places as White City park, where you find nothing but cheap midway attractions, are allowed to operate week days and Sundays, when a great stir is made when such attractions and places of amusement and recreation as a refined motion picture show is desired.

I am a resident in the Grant Park and White City section of Atlanta, and I, like hundreds of other Atlantans, do not care to visit and patronize such places. You are no doubt aware of the fact that you can make a study of evil of any or everything and when you stop and consider the real virtues of a refined picture, as compared with cheap attractions as found in a circus, you cannot deny that there is really no comparison between the two.

Do you think it fair to favor some few and discriminate against the many?

Do you not think our city would fare better and be better thought of by broad-minded people if our newspapers would use less red ink when some individual steps from the righteous path and turn your thoughts and use more newspaper space toward uplifting humanity instead of giving such prominence to crooks.

Mr. Editor, take for a few moments the place of one living in some foreign city or country. What would your opinion be of a city after you read its newspapers, especially when it is preceded by box-car letter type and displayed most conspicuously in all colors of ink?

All people do not see everything alike and it is the opinion of the writer that every one would enjoy living this life if there was more fair treatment accorded to the masses than to the majority of privileges extended to a few individuals that per chance own a few acres of dirt. I feel certain that I voice the sentiment of the majority of the population of Atlanta when I state that Atlanta should have the motion pictures on Sunday (all day), provided that there are not suggestive of evil.

Respectfully,

E. B. LESTER.

FARM COMMISSION TOURING IRELAND

Dublin, Ireland, July 12—The tour of Ireland by the American commission on agricultural organization, cooperation and rural credits, opened today with an official reception at the Royal College of Science. The lord lieutenant of Ireland, the earl of Aberdeen, attended in full state, accompanied by the countess of Aberdeen.

The Rt. Hon. Thomas Wallace Russell, vice president of the department of agriculture and technical instruction for Ireland, welcomed the visitors with a speech.

The commissioners afterward proceeded to Plunkett house, where Sir Horace Curzon Plunkett and others welcomed them on behalf of the agricultural societies of Ireland.

Cotton Mills Get Reparation.

Washington, July 12—Twenty-one manufacturing establishments, principally cotton mills, in the vicinity of Spartanburg, S. C., today was granted by the interstate commerce commission reparation aggregating several thousands dollars from the Southern railway. It was held by the commission that charges on coal from the Coal Creek region of eastern Tennessee to mills had been unreasonable.

VENABLE IS CONNECTED WITH TRAVELERS' BANK

Resigns New York Position to Become Officer of Atlanta Institution.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Travelers' Bank and Trust company, held Friday evening, W. P. Venable, of New York, was elected active vice president of that institution.

Mr. Venable, who was manager of the southern department of the Mechanics' and Metals National bank of New York, has resigned that position following his election as vice president of the Atlanta institution and will become a permanent resident of this city. Mr. Venable and his family will be an acquisition to Atlanta's business and social life.

Mr. Venable is a southern man, a native of Virginia, and is one of a family of bankers. His grandfather, Abram Z. Venable, was engaged in the banking business many years prior to the civil war, and his father, William G. Venable, was an official of the old Farmers' bank, of Virginia. After the war the latter bank was reorganized as the Planters' bank, of Farmville, and W. P. Venable succeeded his father as its cashier. Mr. Venable has been in the banking business all his life. In January, 1909, he went to New York to become southern representative of the National Copper bank, of New York, and in that capacity traveled a year through the south, familiarizing himself with conditions in every section. One year later he was made manager of the foreign department of one of the greatest financial institutions in New York.

Mr. Venable was a member of the executive committee of the Virginia Bankers' association for several years, and at the time of his leaving for New York was vice president of the Virginia Bankers' association.

The affiliation of Mr. Venable with the Travelers' Bank and Trust company, of Atlanta, will therefore be of interest not only here, but in banking circles throughout the country. Mr. Venable's connection as active vice president is in addition to the other officers, who all remain in the same capacity as in the past.

FIDDLERS' CONVENTION HELD AT LUCY LAKE

Fitzgerald, Ga., July 12.—(Special.) A crowd estimated by anywhere from three to five thousand people gathered at Lucy Lake, Friday to enjoy a picnic and hear the fiddlers compete for a prize. The convention was under the auspices of the United Daughters of the Confederacy of Irwin county. The committees of the fete generously donated a part of the proceeds of the day to the Daughters, and a good addition was made to their fund for the erection of a monument which has already been placed at Ocilla.

Twenty-five contestants were present to compete for the prizes, but on account of the crowd only seventeen were able to get on to the platform to take part. The first prize was awarded to Riley Tockston, of Nashville, and the second to Will Hyatt, of Irwin county. None but those who played by ear and not by note were allowed in the competition. A voting contest to determine the most popular young lady in several towns, resulted in favor of Miss Ommie Faulk, of Ocilla.

BUGS IN THOMAS COTTON MAY BE DREADED WEEVIL

Thomasville, Ga., July 12.—(Special.) Are the bugs that are injuring his cotton the advance guard of the dreaded boll weevil, is what Frank Hancock, living in the district of Thomas county, just across the Ocklocknee river, is anxious to know. The bug in question has many of the characteristics that fit the description of the boll weevil and in its operations it eats the lower edge of the boll, causing it to drop off. Mr. Hancock has found a number of them on his cotton within the past few days and so worried is he by the thought that they may be that great pest that he has sent samples of them to the state entomologis that he may find out just what they are.

At the Local Theaters

Keith's Vaudeville.

(At the Forsyth.)

Valerie Bergere and her talented company of players, who so successfully presented "His Japanese Wife" to the biggest attendance that was recorded at the Grand during the season of vaudeville at that big theater, will be the headline attraction at the Forsyth, commencing with matinee on Monday and continuing throughout the week. Miss Bergere will present her newest success called "Judgment," a play founded on a sensational climax that has been worked into one of the most interesting offerings that vaudeville has recorded for the coming season. "Judgment" has been presented in only a few selected places, and though booked for an appearance in regular season at the Forsyth, the high people induced the talented actress to appear in Atlanta at this time, with the distinct understanding that she will be seen again here either later in the winter or before spring. The play will be magnificently staged, and the same talented support appearing with Miss Bergere when seen last, will have the important assignments assisting her. There is hardly any question about the fact that Miss Bergere is the Bernhardt of vaudeville in emotional and dramatic talent. She has been offered a great many inducements to enter the legitimate, but her engagements in vaudeville have always been profitable and pleasant, and she has chosen to continue in this department of things theatrical. "Judgment" promises to be one of the greatest drawing cards tha tvaudeville has ever seen.

The six other acts that will complete the program have been selected with the utmost care.

Europe contributes to the bill, sharing honors with American performers. A feature will be the first appearance here of the Metropolitan minstrels, a combination of clever juveniles, who have scored tremendous success in the leading vaudeville theaters this season. This is a company of young men and girls, who present a genuine first part minstrel show, introducing unusual novelties and song and dance. The musical program includes a number of original song hits that have never been heard here before, and the style in which they are to be rendered will add wonderfully to the magnetism of this act.

Perhaps the greatest musical novelty that has been produced here in vaudeville will be the appearance of a European duo, billed as Les Gougets, who have just been imported through the Keith agents. These people created a wonderful impression upon their first appearance in New York a few weeks ago, and were immediately assigned for a tour of America. Their season will start in the west in August. Prior to that time, the Keith offices have assigned them to Atlanta, Louisville and Detroit. They are skilled musicians, the man and woman, but unusual in that they will offer for exhibition the largest instruments that have ever been seen on any stage. One of these, a horn, measures twenty feet in length and weighs 154 pounds. Another is a cornet eight feet high, and built after the fashion of Jacob's ladder. Aside from the musical ability of this duo, it can be readily seen there is a sensational feature that always has value in vaudeville.

Clark and Verdi, the Italian comedians, promise an unusually clever attraction that is unique and novel. This is another act that has a recognized standing in the Keith houses. The style of the comedians is so different from anything else in vaudeville that there is always a response from an audience.

Britt Wood, the clever young comedian, who appeared here last summer, scoring splendidly in grotesque dances and unique harmonica playing, will be one of the special features on this bill. Wood was discovered in the south playing in one of the small vaudeville houses. He was given an opportunity to establish himself in the high-grade theaters, with the result that he was given a year's consecutive engagement over the circuit, and has been given a duplicate of this tour at a tremendous increase in salary for the coming season.

Work and Play, unique jesting gymnasts, who give splendid entertainers, and the Shelvey Brothers, contortionists of exceptional ability, complete the bill.

The Forsyth management announces for its headliner for the week of July 21 John Conroy and his models, the most wonderful swimming and diving act in the world. Conroy, who is a life saver of national reputation, has been on the stage but two seasons, and has advanced to star headline honors in that time. He has drilled and trained two beautiful young ladies as assistants in his act, and he uses a monster tank in the presentation of the most sensational and wonderful water performance that has been given on any platform anywhere.

(At the Bijou.)

If you are looking for fun, of the kind that makes you laugh down deep, the Bijou is the place to find it this week. "Hotel a la Carte," a musical comedy, said to be one of extraordinary merit, and one of the funniest that has hit the town in a long time, will be the attraction at this popular house for the week. The piece is said to contain an abundance of good music, graceful dancing and pretty girls. Some of those who take the principal parts are Miss Mamie Elmore as Flossie Sparrmint, Walter Weems as the barber, Heinie Schultz and Joe Scott, as Charles Knickerbocker, a bell-hop. The principals are all said to be clever and carry out their parts well, putting plenty of ginger into their acts, and assisting them greatly is a very pretty bunch of chorus girls. The song numbers used are of the latest origin, and tuneful, and the dances which have been improvised to go with them are said to be on the spectacular sort. The scenes in the main are laid in and around a hotel which of itself gives rise to a series of laughable complications. The entire company is said to be a capable one and the musical numbers, of which there is an abundance, are sure to be instaneous hits. During the past several weeks, since the inauguration of musical comedy at the Bijou, this popular little house has been the mecca of amusement seekers. The class of entertainment offered is of the sort seldom presented at popular prices, and Atlanta theatergoers have been quick to appreciate this fact. The Bijou is made comfortable by every cooling device, and patrons can enjoy the performances without sweltering. There will be daily matinees at 2 o'clock, and at 10 and 11 o'clock the theaters, and at 7:30 and 9. On Monday and Saturday two matinees are given at 2:30 and 4.

Motion Pictures.

(At the Grand.)

The success of the policy has been so pronounced that the management has determined to continue the operation of the big theater with exclusive pictures daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, with a complete and entire change of program every day. Arrangements have been made for an exclusive service of five subjects that will run an hour and a half for each program. This means that a movie fan can come into the Grand at any time from 2:30 on and be sure of witnessing five to seven complete, exclusive pictures, the finest productions of the finest producers.

The admission fee will be ten cents, including any seat at any time.

Special features will be offered from time to time, announcements of which will be displayed in the theater, and the lobby of the theater. The Grand is roomy, clean, cool and safe, and skilled operators are in charge of the stage and the operating room. Attendants will look after the comfort and convenience of every patron, and it is predicted that the Grand will become one of the most popular places in Atlanta, just as big first-class theaters in other cities adopting this policy have registered tremendous success.

M'LAURIN IS QUIZZED IN CASE OF GROCERS

Birmingham, Ala., July 12.—For nearly two hours today J. H. McLaurin, of Jacksonville, Fla., president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' association, was cross examined in the suit of the government directed at the association, its officers and many members accused of violating terms of a decree rendered by the federal court as to restraint of trade in 1911.

It was agreed that McLaurin would be placed back on the stand again July 21, when he would bring a lot of papers and files to court. When adjournment is taken today in the case it will be with the understanding that reassembling follow July 21. Next week Judge Grubb will hold court at Jasper, hence continuation of the grocers' suit.

KASTENHUBER TO GET ESTATE WORTH $250,000

Waycross, Ga., June 12.—(Special.)—That his interest in a large estate will soon be turned over to him is the information received today by Edwin G. Kastenhuber, originally of Virginia, but who came to Waycross several years ago from New York. His part of the estate is estimated to be worth approximately $250,000, mostly in securities and some real estate.

The division of the property has been held up for some time. Mr. Kastenhuber has been devoting more of his time to laboratory work since coming here and his experiments with sand and chemical mixtures have been unusually successful in manufacturing tile for floors and mantels.

APPLE SHIPPERS MAY CONVENE IN ATLANTA

The latest prospective convention for Atlanta in 1914 is that of the International Apple Shippers' association, which the convention bureau is now striving to land.

Louis B. Magid, in a letter to the apple shippers, has urged the convention to come here because of the market the south affords for the product and the increasing interest in apple growing in Georgia.

Mr. Magid promises a regular, old-time Georgia barbecue in the apple orchards of north Georgia as one of the entertaining features if the apple growers come to Atlanta.

Killed by Black Damp.

Mayfield, Ky., July 12.—Two farmers were killed by black damp and a third collapsed from the effects of the gas in a cistern only 20 feet deep near here today. Bert Holmes, aged 35, was overcome immediately after entering the cistern for the purpose of cleaning it, and his neighbor, Allie Walston, aged 50, attempted to rescue him. Both men were dead when they were brought to the surface. David Myatt, another would-be rescuer, was hauled out barely alive.

WOMAN IS INJURED WHEN AUTO PLUNGES OVER 20-FOOT BANK

Americus, Ga., July 12.—(Special.) W. S. Ferris and family, residing near Smithville, narrowly escaped death here this morning when their touring car tumbled 20 feet down an embankment at Muckalee creek, within the city limits.

Ferris attempted to exchange seats with another occupant of the automobile without stopping the car or reducing speed, thus losing control of the steering wheel. The car overturned several times and one occupant, Mary Ferris, sustained a broken collar bone.

The car was stopped against a fence at the brink of the deep creek, into which it otherwise would have rolled with its five occupants.

NEWSPAPERS FIRST STATE ADVERTISERS

Their Columns Declared Best and Most Economical Method of Reaching Public.

Evansville, Ind., July 12.—(Special.)—A lively discussion has been going on here for some weeks among a number of merchants and manufacturers as to which was the most economical method of advertising. Being named to investigate the matter, J. S. Oliver, advertising manager of the Evansville Brewing association, wrote to twenty of the most prominent national advertisers in the United States and asked them which publicity medium, in their estimation, was the most valuable—newspapers, billboards, painted walls, street cars or direct circulars?

Nineteen of the twenty national newspapers without hesitation, and a number went so far as to recite their experience in detail and named the reasons for their conclusion. One firm had been a persistent and successful advertiser for thirty years; practically all of them manufacture articles that have long been household words throughout the whole country, and who have had sufficient practical experience to qualify them as capable judges.

This disclosure has influenced the Evansville Brewing association to appropriate a considerable sum to be expended for newspaper advertising.

FERTILIZER FACTORY TO LOCATE AT DAWSON

Dawson, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—Dawson is to have at an early date a big fertilizer factory, to cost about $100,000, which the Alabama Chemical company will erect here on a lot purchased from J. D. Laing, near the depot of the Seaboard Air Line railway. This enterprise has been secured largely through the efforts of Messrs. Lowrey Bros. & Davidson, of this city, and John S. Lowrey will be the manager of the company, which will give employment to about 150 men. The city council passed a resolution in order to induce the company to locate here, giving it an exemption from taxes for a period of five years.

The city tax assessors have completed their arduous labors and delivered their report to City Clerk R. E. Bell and the total valuation of Dawson's property is fixed by the board at $2,062,043, which is an increase of nearly $100,000 over last year's figures.

MARIETTA DISTRICT CONFERENCES CLOSES

Jasper, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—The Methodist conference of the Marietta district closed its session here this week. The conference was largely attended, more than one hundred delegates and teachers being there. The Marietta district is very large in territory, stretching from Blairsville on Union county to Atlanta Heights. Presiding Elder Cooper was in charge of the conference. He dispatched the business rapidly and fearlessly. A resolution against intercollegiate sports was passed by a large majority. The opposition was lead by Dr. J. A. Sharp, of Young Harris college.

A resolution indorsing the Webb bill was passed. A resolution offered by Rev. Nath Thompson to remove some of the restrictions placed upon women of the church was tabled on motion of one of the delegates.

TARIFF ON BANANAS IS BEING PROTESTED

New York, July 12.—President Wilson will be deluged with hundreds of letters from New Yorkers in defense of the banana as the "poor man's fruit" if those present last night at a meeting in Cooper Union follow the advice of speakers in protest against the proposed tax of one-tenth of one per cent per pound on bananas imported into this country.

Mrs. Julia Heath, president of the Housewives' league, and other women spoke, urging their auditors to send to President Wilson a personal letter of protest. Resolutions also were passed calling upon congress to reject the proposed tax, declaring that "such a tariff was not within the purview of the voters who elected the democratic party to power."

How's Your Appetite?

Eat three good meals a day? Enjoy your food? Never know you've eaten except for that pleasurable feeling that food well-digested brings?

Or, haven't you any interest at mealtime because you're afraid of what will happen afterward? Does the little you do eat lie like lead in your stomach? If that's the way you feel,

Take Nuxcara 3 Times a Day

One-half hour before each meal. You can eat what you please without fear. Nuxcara is a scientific remedy for indigestion, dyspepsia, all stomach and bowel disorders. It not only gives instant relief, but when taken regularly gradually effects a permanent cure.

Unlike other preparations, it acts directly on the lining of the stomach and bowels, restoring them to their natural healthy condition; encouraging the secretion and flow of the gastric juices which control digestion.

Nuxcara is a pure vegetable preparation, the discovery of a well-known local druggist. Through its use, hundreds of Atlantans now enjoy vigorous health, and hundreds more use and recommend it daily. It has been prescribed by reputable physicians for many years with wonderful success.

Read the testimonial to the right. What Nuxcara has gong for them, it will do for you, if you take it three times a day.

Mr. S. B. Baldwin, 411 Rawson St., Atlanta, Ga., writes:

My wife suffered for a long time with stomach and intestinal indigestion which finally set up a catarrhal condition of the entire digestive tract, resulting in chronic appendicitis. We thought this could be relieved only by an operation. But through the advice of friends I gave her Nuxcara, the scientific remedy for indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach and bowel disorders. The first bottle removed all distressing symptoms and after taking four more bottles she completely recovered and now enjoys perfect health.

My wife's mother was so pleased with the result in this case that she, too, decided to try Nuxcara. Where an operation had failed to relieve her Nuxcara gave her immediate relief. Today she is in better health than she has been for years. Nuxcara is the best medicine I know of for stomach and bowel disorders and I heartily recommend it as a positive remedy.

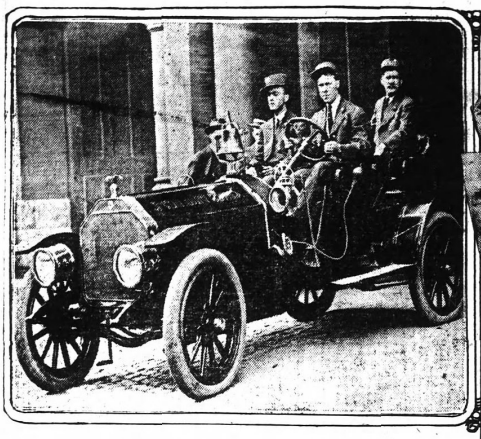
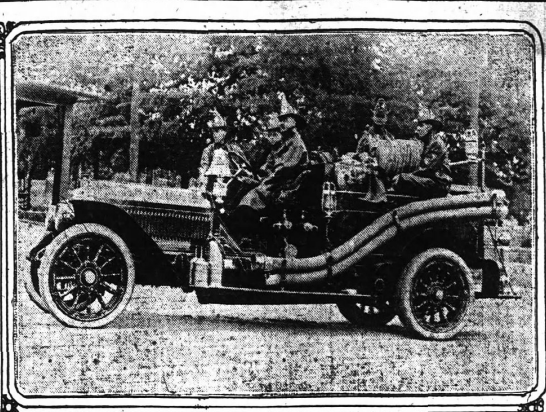
THE DAILY LIFE OF AN ATLANTA FIREMAN IS FILLED WITH THRILLS AND DANGER





These pictures show Chief of the Fire Department W. B. Cummings (top center) and some interesting phases of the work of the fire laddies. At the left of the chief is his big red automobile, just leaving the Alabama street station for a fire, and under it is a hose wagon, also from headquarters, making a mad dash to the scene of action. The new combination automobile truck of Station No. 14, in West End, is shown to the right of the chief, and in the diagonally opposite corner the machine is shown again leaving the new West End firehouse, which Chief Cummings considers ideal in arrangement and architecture. The firemen do not have time to dress for action before leaving the station, as is shown in the picture (right center) where the firemen are dressing on the extension ladder truck while it is going at full speed. Beneath, the extension ladder is shown in use with three firemen upon it ready for a rescue. The small picture in the center shows the work of fire-fighting in progress. Beneath this picture are the ruins of the building at Whitehall street and Trinity avenue, which, on the morning of last February 26, crushed to death J. J. Gillespie, one of the bravest men of the department.

By Ned McIntosh.

This month celebrates the thirty-first anniversary of the organized paid fire department of the city of Atlanta.

There are in the department today but four of the very essential items of the first proud little department which paraded down Peachtree street in 1882. Two of these are human, which have been exposed continuously to the perils of death which have swept man after man from their sides, while the other two are the products of the mind and hand of man, and, strange to say, the former are still in active service and the latter have, for lo, these many years, been mere relics of the first glory that was.

Chief W. B. Cummings, at headquarters, and Captain W. B. Cody, of Engine House No. 4, are the only members now "on the job" of the first paid department.

The little copy of the constitution and by-laws of the first organization lies moldy and yellow with age in a drawer in Chief Cummings' desk, and its venerable measures are never consulted by the powers that now be, but it is only drawn out occasionally by the chief to be exhibited to visitors as a curiosity. Chief Cummings glances through its yellowed pages and pauses at a list of the members that is printed in it to dream for a moment of the days that were, and the little book is laid away until the next visitor needs entertainment.

The Clang of the Bell.

In the tower of the headquarters station, down on Alabama street, hangs the big bell that in the early days was the wonder of the town and guardian of the lives and property of its citizens. In those days the sound of its tongue was a power in the land, arousing to action and striking terror to the heart in the dead of the night. But today it hangs silent, and there is not so much as a responsive vibration to the shouts of the men, the pounding of hoofs that strike fire from the pavement and the shriek of the chief's siren below!

But in fighting the red terror, Chief Cummings is older even than the paid department itself.

Five years before the paid department ever came into existence, the chief was sweating up the Washington street hill with the hose cart of Volunteer Fire Station No. 2 in tow.

But even in those days, when the chief had a bit more wool where the wool ought to grow and his whiskers were not so grizzled, he was making his mark. Many of the older citizens will remember a dashing youth who, about 1880, was the foreman of Volunteer Fire Station No. 2, which stood down on Washington street, where the present viaduct spans the railroads. Foreman Cummings was even then a recognized leader and expert in fire fighting.

When the big bell boomed out its call into the night, as some shivering citizen clad in night attire tugged excitedly at the rope, Foreman Cummings was usually the first mother's son of the volunteer service to bounce into his "homespuns" and show up at the station.

Early Fire Fighting.

Fire fighting in those days was a very different proposition from what it is today. There was not the big and well-trained corps of men always waiting at the station for the alarm to ring, but in the middle of the night when somebody's house was burning down the citizenry which composed the fire department was snugly tucked away in bed in various parts of town, and it depended on how soundly they were sleeping and which way the wind was carrying the sound of the alarm bell as to whether there were enough "firemen" pulled from bed to put out the fire.

There was no straining of excited horses, clamor of gongs and shrieking of automobile sirens when a fire broke out then. And there was no spectacular array of formidable machinery dashing around the corner the second the alarm sounded. Far different. When the bell rang then the hoe was dropped in the garden, the customer in the store went unsold, for every man dropped his business and rushed to the nearest fire station, and grabbed the rope of the hose cart. Then he had to run a mile, maybe, lugging the cart behind him, only to arrive at the fire after the house had burned down.

Neither was the fire department then what it is now. The volunteer fire service was more or less of a social organization then. There were crack society companies, which held their balls and dances and entertainments, and the fire house was the rendezvous of the "sports" of the town, and the gossiping place of local politicians. The fire station was the general dispenser of news.

But today a fireman has something more to attend to than dancing and politics. His is a business and not a pastime or fad.

It is his to be awake even while he is asleep. At night his clothes are arranged by his bed so that when the electric alarm sounds he literally steps from his bed into his clothes and is instantly dressed. There is not even time for the use of stairs nowadays, but the husky fireman makes a leap for a brass pole beside his bed and slides down through a hole in the floor to the room below where the apparatus is waiting.

The horses are no less well trained than the men, but as soon as the alarm rings, rush from their stalls to their respective pieces of apparatus. A fireman pulls a trigger and the harness drops on the horses and they are automatically hitched to the fire wagons. By this time each fireman is standing in his position, and as the apparatus dashes out catches his place. His fire fighting clothes are on the wagons and each man dresses for his work as the apparatus dashes madly up the street.

Meanwhile the chief's red automobile is three blocks up the street ahead of the horses, shrieking like a soul in the regions of the damned. Pedestrians are scattering helter-skelter. Policemen have taken positions on each corner with hands aloft, and all traffic is at a standstill to give the chief and his boys the right of way.

The danger has already begun, long before the firemen reach the scene of battle, for, perhaps, a fireman dreads nothing more than being flung from his wagon as it takes a corner on two wheels and being crushed under the hoofs of the foaming horses and the heavy wheels behind him.

The chief himself says that one of the closest calls he has ever had in his thirty-six years of service was in this very way.

But at the fire dangers multiply with lightninglike speed on all sides. There is the boiling, strangling smoke and the hungry flames that leap from the dark to destroy. There is the treacherous wall that drops like a deadfall upon its victims, and the pitfall of the undermined floor. The dreaded live wire lurks silently in the dark to strike like a serpent.

There is a little book in Chief Cummings' desk that contains the name of every man that has ever left the department for any reason. There is not a man in the department who has not the hope that when the time comes for him to go the words, "He died in discharge of his duty," may be inscribed after his name.

These words spell faithfulness, honor, bravery, heroism and all that is to be desired in a man.

During the administration of Chief Cummings this has been written after the names of four men.

Brenau, South's most Progressive College

BY Mary Carter Winter

BRENAU TENNIS GIRL

SINCE 1878, when Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., was first chartered, the college has grown from a small, obscure seminary, with thirty students, to a great college for women, with an attendance of four hundred students or more from all parts of the world. It has assumed first place among the colleges of the south, and is steadily advancing along the most progressive educational lines.

Its growth has been phenomenal, but so logical that needed modifications of ideals and customs have been made naturally and without radical changes.

Brenau bases its claim to leadership on several distinctive innovations.

It was one of the first colleges for women to recognize the need of training young girls for their special duties as women, and led the movement for comprehensive education in domestic science and related studies by accrediting such studies among the regular college courses.

As early as 1898 Brenau had adopted the system of self-government in the student body—a system which is now being recognized by many other colleges, both for women and men; and which, since its establishment, has proven most successful.

Brenau's unit system, originated several years ago, is peculiarly advantageous, as it enables girls of varying mental endowment to complete the college course within the time best suited to their needs. Those who are especially gifted or mature may finish the prescribed work within three years instead of four, while those who work slowly because of ill health, or poor natural endowment, may finish in five years without embarrassment. The average girl under this system will make the required credits in the usual four years.

INTERESTING INNOVATIONS

Brenau leads also in its recognition of the necessity of familiarizing the students with the everyday things they will need to know when no longer sheltered by college walls.

How many times one hears some laughing or disparaging remark about a woman's inability to understand banking customs, postoffice regulations and business procedure in general. The Brenau girl has opportunity to acquire practical knowledge of these everyday things in a matter-of-fact way.

Brenau has a bank of its own, which is legally chartered and run according to the usual banking laws. Thus the students learn by practical experience how to make deposits, write checks, and keep tab on their bank balances. Also it provides a safe depository for money and valuables.

Brenau has a postoffice, modern and complete in every detail. It contains about a hundred boxes with combination locks and the usual delivery window.

Such innovations have a practical value in education and supplement literary and artistic development.

AN "A-1" COLLEGE

The literary courses give Brenau rank as an A-1 college.

The Conservatory of Music is one of the finest in America. Under the direction of Otto Pfeffercorn, composer, concert pianist and teacher, it offers unequalled opportunity for acquiring technical skill and an intellectual understanding of music.

Through the addition to the faculty this year of Gustav Louis Becker, the noted musician, who will direct the newly established normal department, the scope of the conservatory is materially broadened.

Another advantage is that Gainesville is so near to Atlanta that the students have opportunity to hear grand opera by the artists of the Metropolitan Opera company of New York, who annually come for a week's festival of music; as well as other events of educational and artistic value.

Brenau has an art school second to none in the south. Sketching, painting, pottery, metal work, wood carving, basketry, stenciling, interior decoration, all have their place in the work of the art student.

The Brenau School of Oratory is the largest for the study of literary expression in the south. Oratory graduates are entitled to admission to the senior class of the Emerson School of Oratory, at Boston, the foremost in America.

BRENAU'S FACULTY.

The Brenau faculty is composed of forty-four men and women who have studied in the universities of the world. Some have graduated from Berlin universities, from the University of Wuerzburg, from Paris, from London and American universities of note. Some have been with the college for years. Their work has become a part of themselves, the expression of their ideals and hopes. They have mothered so many girls that they instinctively know how to reach the best in each, and to each they give a part of their love and interest.

The students feel the Brenau atmosphere. They respond to the wishes and ambitions of their protectors and grow to strong and gracious womanhood.

When a girl goes to college she leaves the supporting influence of home surroundings and home love. It is the duty of the college to supply them.

At Brenau she enters a refined and cultivated environment. She is associated with men and women who have in mind always the ideal Brenau Girl—that is, the Ideal Woman. Every influence lends itself to her development.

THE TRAINED NURSE'S DUTY.

A trained nurse looks after her health—keeps her well instead of curing her when sick. Athletics, gymnasium work and pleasant excursions supplement the benefits of light, well ventilated and comfortable rooms for dormitory and class uses.

Whole-hearted comradeship with several hundred girls trains her to respect the rights of others and to recognize the necessity for a few fundamental laws. Brenau is a little world in itself wherein the student learns the meaning of justice, fair play and helpfulness.

Thus are strengthened her ethical and moral nature, while the influences of church and Y. W. C. A. form permanent religious standards.

Intellectual training is sane and thorough; the artistic sensibilities are highly cultivated.

The Domestic Science Department creates a new and interesting viewpoint towards every-day things, training not the cook, the dressmaker, or milliner (though the work will prove valuable to any who may adopt professions of the kind) but the head of a household.

Brenau's distinctive features are too many to be enumerated. The best way in which to secure a more comprehensive idea of the college, is to send for the beautiful illustrated catalog; or, better still, pay Brenau a visit and see for yourself. You will like it.

New Mid-Summer Dresses At Opportunity Prices

To announce that we have 2,000 summer dresses in stock at mid-season is the unprecedented, though certainly not an exaggeration. Neither are they simply unsold goods, but very decidedly the reverse of this condition.

There are few dresses in this house that have not arrived within 30 days. In the last two weeks we have received over 500 summer dresses of the very newest models, of the chosen summer fabrics, all highly fashioned in the latest designs, many of them advancing the ideas being now accepted for fall wear.

It is the plan of this house that summer stocks do not "run down" because of the approach of fall, but rather to improve them by advance ideas.

'Tis your privilege of selections from a large stock, and your opportunity to buy at greatly reduced prices. At this season we buy to advantage, of new stocks, and we sell them according to the buying, which is a decided advantage over buying old stocks that have been remarked, because of being shopworn.

In addition to the 500 new dresses on sale tomorrow at special summer prices, every dress that has been here over 30 days has also received a new mark for this special Monday selling.

GUARDS SURROUND LOBBYIST MULHALL AS HE TELLS STORY

MULHALL DISAPPEARS AFTER LEAVING STAND

Senate Resolved Not to Let House Probers Have Witness at Present—Sensational Story by Mulhall.

Washington, July 12.—When the senate and house lobby investigators adjourned today for Sunday's rest, the fight for possession of Martin M. Mulhall, J. H. McMichael and other witnesses still was in progress, with the odds strongly favoring Chairman Overman and his senate committee.

The Overman committee adopted a technical measure of safety to allow Mulhall to get out of town for Sunday, by remaining in session until after he had boarded a 12 o'clock train for New York. Chairman Overman was prepared to resume the investigation this afternoon, had the house committee made any attempt to stop Mulhall or subpoena him for immediate testimony before the Garrett committee.

Overtures of peace from both sides passed back and forth by special messengers during the day, and on the last exchange of courtesies late this afternoon, it seemed certain the house investigators would be given an opportunity to start work next week with McMichael or some other witness, provided they made a respectful request on the senate committee for his production.

Tried to Take Mulhall Away.

The fight which came to a head late last night, when an officer of the house tried to take Mulhall away from the senate committee at the end of an evening's hearing, was resumed as soon as preliminaries could be dispensed with this morning. Mulhall already had started the recital of his alleged activities as "lobbyist" for the National Association of Manufacturers, and was prepared to take up the identification of his letters where he left off last night.

With Mulhall, McMichael and the other witnesses in the room, and witnesses and papers guarded by a cordon of sergeants-at-arms and senate employees, Chairman Overman and his committee retired and indicted an epistle to Chairman Garrett, of the house committee.

This called attention to the attempt of the house to capture Mulhall the night before, and asserted the determination of the senate to hold the witnesses and the papers until it got through with them. Chairman Overman said no disrespect was meant to the house, and that there was no desire to hamper the other body's investigation.

The epistle was dispatched by special messenger, and the committee waded into the mass of Mulhall correspondence, with officers and attorneys of the National Association of Manufacturers watching proceedings. They had not gotten out of the 1904 file when Chairman Garrett's special messenger arrived with an answer to the Overman letter.

Might Take Hold of McMichael.

Mr. Garrett said the house committee thought it might take hold of Mr. McMichael, who, Mulhall alleged, had received pay from the National Association of Manufacturers while acting as chief page of the house of representatives. Mr. Garrett wanted to know whether it was true the senate committee had told McMichael he could not testify before the house committee until the senate investigators finished with him. Mr. Garrett protested no disrespect was meant to the senate committee, but that the house committee wanted to investigate its own affairs.

Again there was a council of war behind closed doors in the senate, and a new letter was drafted. In it Chairman Overman intimated that the senate committee intended to keep all its witnesses under its direct surveillance, where they could be had when wanted, but that if the house should present a proper request for some witness who did not happen to be then engaged on the senate side, the committee would "give courteous consideration to applications."

In the meantime Mr. Mulhall, who had progressed only as far as the latter part of 1906 in his documentary recital of his lobbying work for the National Association of Manufacturers, had disappeared. He was released from the senate committee room at 1:40, but the committee announced it would meet at 2:30. When that time arrived, Chairman Overman found one answer to the senate committee's letter had appeared on the scene, and said the committee would recess until 10 o'clock Monday.

Mulhall Goes to New York.

With the consent of the committee, Mulhall had departed for New York, to spend Sunday, but the senate committee remained technically in session so he could be called back to the stand if the house committee attempted to stop him, or subpoena him for testimony this afternoon.

Chairman Overman's last letter was delivered over by the Garrett committee in a secret session late in the afternoon, but no answer was made. The house committee will reconvene at 10:30 a. m. Monday. From the language of the final letter from the senate chairman the house committee expects to be able to get hold of witness McMichael Monday.

James A. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, and referred to by Mulhall in a published statement as the "chief lobbyist" of the association at Washington, had also been subpoenaed "duces tecum" by the house committee. He arrived in the afternoon to tell them that he had previously been summoned by the senate committee, who also commanded him to "produce the papers," and he said the senate committee had possession of all his papers, as well as those of Mulhall and the other witnesses.

In Pay of Manufacturers.

If McMichael is put on the stand by the Garrett committee Monday, that body will put plunge at once into the Mulhall charges that spying was being done in the house for the manufacturers' association. Mulhall alleged that McMichael received $50 weekly and extra amounts to secure information when chief of the house pages and that he used the staff of pages to aid him. In one of the replies to Chairman Garrett today, Chairman Overman, of the senate committee, said that body of investigators did not expect "to enter into any special investigation of the charges against house membership or employes." It is expected that two investigations, therefore, will be in full running order Monday or Tuesday.

The senate committee today secured the identification of nearly 200 additional letters and documents furnished by Mulhall bearing on his activities as a representative of the National Association of Manufacturers in 1904 and 1905, and in political fights in Maryland and New Jersey and in union labor fights in Philadelphia. His activity as a strike suppressor in Philadelphia in 1906 gave the committee the occasion for most of its questioning. He admitted he had employed officers or members of labor unions to secure inside information of their doings, had spent money freely to break up the printers' strike in Philadelphia, and had in various ways tried to control labor union affairs.

Many letters told in detail of the fight made against former Senator McComas, of Maryland, because of his advocacy of eight-hour legislation; and against William Hughes, then representative, now senator from New Jersey, because of his activity in support of labor measures. In all of his work, Mulhall said, he represented the National Association of Manufacturers.

James A. Emery, counsel for the association, made a formal request upon the committee to have it give Robert McCarter, of New Jersey, the right to appear as counsel for the manufacturers' body. Jackson H. Ralston, of Washington, also requested permission to appear as counsel for the American Federation of Labor. The senate committee did not decide today as to whether the attorneys would be permitted to take part.

Subpoenas for Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Springer, of Baltimore, parents of Mrs. Martin M. Mulhall, were issued by the house committee.

While the senate committee retired for its executive conference three employees rom the sergeant-at-arms' office threw senate clerks and a page boy kept guard over the original and duplicate papers on the committee table and watched the witnesses to prevent the serving of any house subpoenas upon them.

Mulhall Identifies Letters.

Chairman Overman said the committee would later decide whether McCarter should have the general privilege of an attorney for the association.

Mulhall identified more letters showing his relations with Marshall Cushing, secretary of the association of manufacturers. He testified he had an understanding with Cushing that he was to receive $100 a week and $40 a week for expenses for general field work and lobby work in Washington." His arrangement with Cushing began in the summer of 1904 and he understood it to be permanent, although he had nothing in writing to bind the association.

Mulhall testified further of how he worked to defeat the late Senator McComas, of Maryland, although he posed as the senator's friend. He said he had received 500 letters from Cushing directed against McComas.

"I turned them over to Carl M. Downs, secretary to McComas," he said.

"Do you mean you delivered these letters against McComas to his secretary?" demanded Senator Reed.

"Carl M. Downs was in the pay of Cushing," replied the witness, who went on to explain that he quarrelled with Cushing because he "was buying out the secretary of a senator."

A letter to Senator Foraker, September 19, 1904, referred to a suggestion that Mulhall go to Rhode Island to help Senator Aldrich in his campaign. He testified he went later at the request of Aldrich. "He asked me to get into touch with labor men there to get their support."

Double Game Is Denied.

Letters from C. B. Alden, then secretary to Foraker, and Arthur B. Shelton, secretary to Aldrich, showed that Mulhall's suggestion to go to Rhode Island had been the subject of some correspondence. Alden and Shelton knew he was employed by the association, and he had not tried to conceal the source of his employment.

Mulhall identified a letter from James J. Ridge, outlining work done by Ridge among Rhode Island labor men in 1904 in behalf of Aldrich's candidacy. Mulhall testified giving Ridge $69 which he got from Cushing, secretary for the manufacturers, to help Aldrich in his campaign for re-election. In a letter relating to Ridge it was said "the senator is well pleased with the work of your friend."

Attorney McCarter tried to have the committee keep out testimony by Mulhall relating to conversations between Cushing and others which he had not actually heard. The committee refused.

Reference to Taft.

A reference to President Taft came in connection with notations on the back of one of the Mulhall envelopes. The following names appeared: C. D. Firstos, Columbus Buggy company; Colonel W. H. Morgan, Defiance, Ohio; John S. Taylor, East Liverpool; D. J. Sinclair, Steubenville; H. M. Hanna, Cleveland."

"These five names were submitted to me by Senator Foraker, of Ohio, to hand to President Taft at an interview I was to have with him at his summer residence in 1910, concerning the campaign in Ohio," Mulhall testified. The committee did not develop that point further.

Testifying about the campaign against Hughes, Mulhall swore he went to Paterson to aid Hughes' opponent. He hired six union men to work against Hughes and paid them altogether about $1,800, which came from the National Association of Manufacturers through Cushing.

"The union men in the pay of the National Association of Manufacturers," Mulhall said, "had in possession of 75,000 circulars sent into the district by the American Federation of Labor to aid Hughes, and turned them over to the republican campaign committee."

He named the following as the men he hired to work against Hughes:

Mulhall thought that George Burke, who was elected in Hughes' district, a deputy collector of internal revenue, was on his payroll in the campaign against Hughes.

Paid a Weekly Salary.

"You bribed these men to vote against Hughes?" asked Senator Cummins.

"I don't know whether you can call it bribery or not—they were paid a weekly salary. That money was spent in legitimate work—that's what they called it. It has been done by both parties for years. Ryan was on my list for about fifteen weeks altogether, first at $40 and then $60 a week,' said Mulhall. He added that Ryan was 'on the list' to do general political work in labor ranks, engaged in 'helping to beat Hughes.'"

Senator Reed asked if the National Association of Manufacturers went 'generally into politics' and supported the republican organization, or whether it singled out individual men throughout the country whom it supported. Mulhall said it "generally" supported the republican ticket, and particularly opposed democrats who were too actively opposed to its labor policies.

Efforts to control Senator McComas on labor legislation were further shown by another letter, December 15, 1904, apparently to Mulhall, and which he said was written by Cushing. It urged Mulhall to deal with McComas on the supposition that the latter wanted a federal judgeship.

"He (McComas) needs to understand," the letter added, "that the industrial needs of the country are more thoroughly organized than ever before, and that they will have none of him or of his eight-hour bill. All the same, they are not vindictive, and if he honestly means to let up, you, of course, can promise to do anything that you can do to remove any of the obstacles that you can from the path of his ambitions."

Other letters from Cushing to Mulhall developed the extent to which Mulhall was working with various political factions in Maryland, either trying to "select a winner" or "abate McComas' activity" in support of his eight-hour bill. Many of the men he mentioned in his letters as opposed to the "eight-hour bill" in the association's campaign against that measure were "strictly honest in that position," he thought.

"Others pretended to be honestly opposed to it because you paid them so?" suggested Senator Walsh.

"Yes, that's it."

In a report February 5, 1905, to Cushing about political developments in Baltimore, Mulhall quoted George B. Squiers, a bookkeeper for the American Federation of Labor, on the support the labor forces were giving McComas and the fight they were making for anti-injunction and eight-hour legislation.

"Was Squiers acting in good faith or was he a spy in the union headquarters employed by the National Association of Manufacturers?" asked Senator Cummins.

"Not at that time, but later on he was acting as a spy for Cushing in the American Federation of Labor," replied Mulhall.

A Cushing letter to Mulhall, June 9, 1905, said:

"I guess it is better for you to stay out of the Central Labor union."

Labor Union Men Hired.

"A number of labor union workers were engaged in the fight for election of manufacturers. He testified he had an understanding with Cushing that he was to receive $100 a week and $40 a week for expenses for 'general field work and lobby work in Washington.' His arrangement with Cushing began in the summer of 1904 and he understood it to be permanent, although he had nothing in writing to bind the association.

By Robert Guin, Special Correspondent

St. Simons Island, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—John Marshall Slaton, governor of Georgia, ate a soldier's grub for supper in the camp of the Fifth regiment tonight and slept in a soldier's tent, roughing it like the other six hundred Atlantans who are undergoing instruction in war tactics under the direction of army officers.

The governor and his party arrived on the pier promptly at 10:30 o'clock and were escorted to camp by Colonel Pomeroy and while a cannon gave the governor's salute of seventeen guns. The regiment had been formed on the parade ground and passed in review, headed by the twenty-two piece regiment band. A war strength company then gave an exhibition attack and late in the afternoon the governor saw the regiment in dress parade.

Governor Well Pleased.

Governor Slaton was highly pleased with the showing made by the fifth and congratulated Colonel Pomeroy on the conduct of the men.

From a tin plate, he was served the regular camp fare of boiled meat, hominy and light bread, and from a tin cup he drank black coffee, and declared it was great. An ever pleasant smile on the chief executive's face showed that he was having a good time and was thoroughly enjoying the hospitality of camp Joseph M. Brown.

Mrs. Slaton and the ladies of the governor's party are at the new St. Simons hotel. Tonight the official party was entertained at the hotel by the officers of the regiment. The party will remain over all day Sunday, returning to Atlanta Monday.

Boys Given Hard Work.

The boys are being put through strenuous drill in extended order and are learning how to fight as on the battlefield. A long hike will be taken Tuesday, the regiment leaving camp in heavy marching equipment. The individual men will cook their own food and sleep at night under dog tents.

A large number of lady visitors came to camp during the day and brightened up the dull routine, over half of the regiment have over indulged in the sun during midday and are badly sunburned, but not a man has been reported seriously sick.

WILSON ENDS VACATION; BACK TO THE CAPITAL

Cornish, N. H., July 12.—President Wilson practically ended his vacation today and will leave here at 2:52 o'clock tomorrow afternoon for Washington, arriving there early Monday.

In all the while here the president has motored about 600 miles and has had a taste of what dust a six weeks' drought can produce. Speaking of the dust today he laughingly remarked that he came to New Hampshire to "see the country and not to swallow it."

The president, nevertheless, is fond of his summer home. How soon he will be able to get back depends upon the adjournment of the present session of congress, which democratic leaders have conceded will not be before some time in September. Immediately after the adjournment the president intends to take a three weeks' trip to the Panama canal.

It is doubtful when he will return for a long visit, but not before the first of October at the earliest. No definite plans have been made for week-end trips.

ROLF GETS GOOD PLACE AT OKLAHOMA STATION

It will be pleasing information to the friends in Georgia of Arthur F. Roof that he has been called to the headship of the poultry department of the Oklahoma experiment station at a much larger salary than he received at the Georgia station and he will have a broader field in which to work.

During the eleven months Mr. Rolf was at the head of the poultry department of the Georgia station he did excellent work and made many friends throughout the state. The department at the Georgia station was discontinued on the first of this month because of a suggestion that in Georgia and the south the poultry industry was extension or educational rather than experimental work.

COLLEGE PARK OFFERS $25 PRIZE FOR SLOGAN

New Name Is Also Wanted to Replace That of "Board of Trade."

College Park, a progressive residential suburb of Atlanta, through the board of trade of that place, makes an appeal to the slogan writers everywhere. Not only does the raded daw

Not only does the organization want a slogan for the organization and town, but they want a better name than that of the "board of trade" for their organization. A prize of $25 in gold is offered to the person who will suggest the best name and slogan.

After some discussion among the members of the board of trade Friday night as to an appropriate name and a suitable slogan it was decided to leave the task to the public in general, hence the idea of the prize.

The contest closes July 31 and the prize will be awarded at the next meeting of the organization, which will be held August 1. All replies should be sent to the publicity committee at College Park or to Rev. Fritz Rauschenberg, secretary of the present board of trade.

Name Changed in 1895.

The suggestion of a contest for a slogan brought to mind the fact that in 1895 a lot in the town at that time was offered to the person who would suggest the best name for the town, at that time known as Manchester. The contest interested prominent people throughout the entire country and resulted in the name of College Park, the name having been suggested by Mrs. Mary Gordon Roper. At that time the lot that was awarded Mrs. Roper was valued at only $250; today its value is given at $2,000.

Despite the unfavorable weather conditions, the meeting of the College Park board of trade was largely attended Friday night. This was the second meeting, the organization having been launched only the week before. At this meeting the constitution and bylaws, as submitted by a committee of prominent citizens, were adopted. New members were enrolled, bringing the membership up from fifty-two to seventy-eight.

One of the first acts of the organization was to pass a resolution asking a government appropriation for the enlargement and better equipping of the College Park postoffice. A committee was appointed to take the matter up with the proper government authorities and Congressman Howard and Senator Smith.

CHINK SEAMEN MUTINY AND ATTACK OFFICERS

Newport News, Va., July 12.—Fourteen Chinamen, stokers and firemen on the British steamship Norman Monarch, bound from New Orleans to Hamburg, mutinied Thursday, about 180 miles off this port, and attacked the ship's officers with knives, crowbars, hatch bars and other weapons. The chief engineer, third engineer and boatswain are lying near death as the result of the fight that followed, and the second mate and one Chinaman also are in a serious condition.

Upon the arrival of the vessel in this port late this afternoon the Chinamen were placed under arrest by action of the immigration authorities. They are being held under $7,000 bond for deportation.

Enraged because one of their number was put in irons for some minor offense, the Chinese attacked the third engineer. A spanner wielded by one of the mutineers struck him on the back of the head, laying him prostrate. The noise of the uproar attracted the other officers from dinner. Hurrying to the engine room, they were met by concerted attack on the part of the Chinese. Knives, crowbars and other weapons were used with telling effect, the chief engineer and boatswain falling before blows of the sailors. One Chinaman was felled to the deck by a blow of the captain's fist. The officers were relieved by sailors and overcame the mutineers.

WOMEN'S VOTES FAIL TO GIVE KINDERGARTEN

Aurora, Ill., July 12.—Women's votes in Geneva, Ill., did not procure for that city a public kindergarten in a special election today. One hundred and eighty women voted, in a total of 407 votes cast, but the proposition was lost, 189 to 228.

The measure was urged by clubwomen, who had half a dozen automobiles, placarded with "We Want a Kindergarten," carrying voters to the polls. Mrs. Robert Farson, leader of the women voters, tonight declared that the defeat was caused by their inability to get working women interested in voting so soon after their enfranchisement by the recent legislature.

MORE PROBING URGED FOR "MONEY TRUST"

Resolutions Along Two Different Lines Introduced in the House.

Washington, July 12.—Currency difficulties broke out along two different lines in the house today with the introduction of resolutions directing investigations.

The first, by Representative Henry, proposes a renewal of the investigation of the "money trust" as an adjunct and aid to the banking committee in its consideration of the administration currency bill.

The second, by Representative Lindbergh, of Minnesota, progressive member of the committee, proposes an investigation to determine whether the Glass bill would nt create a mnstrous monopoly controlled and operated by private interests.

Representative Henry's resolution would give the committee plenary and inquisitorial powers over national banks and interstate corporations.

In a statement accompanying his resolution Representative Henry declared that it was introduced "solely with a view to aid and expedite consideration of pending banking and currency legislation" and should be hastened "to aid the banking committee to obtain all the valuable information still concealed that will be of vast importance in the solution of the currency problems."

He declared that the recent bank failure in Pittsburg emphsized the need of knowing directly "how these great institutions use their office boys, stenographers, porters and dummies to wreck and loot banks and rob innocent depositors of their trust funds. We need to dig deeper into their manipulations, schemes and conspiracies in order to understand why they so greatly dread the eye of federal scrutiny."

Representative Lindbergh's resolution contained as a preamble an attack upon the methods of the democratic members of the banking committee in considering the Glass bill in secrett conference.

It proposes an investigation by "a committee of seven to determine whether the Glass bill would not create a government policy inconsistent with the Sherman law doctrine by fostering a monopoly to privately control for selfish interests, the distribution of money and credit" and whether or not "it is constitutional for the government to provide a method by which to organize private interests into a compact mutual interest with the power to control the distribution of money and credit."

Both resolutions were referred to the rules committee, of which Representative Henry is chairman.

Why Don't You Get Rid of That Corn Tonight?

Where is the reason in paring, peeling, picking and gouging at that corn, when you have been at it for months and it hurts more than ever? You can't remove the whole corn that way, but you can and do endanger yourself to blood poisoning. Yes, many deaths have resulted from a careless slip of the blade and an irritated, bleeding corn.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful. There is positively no pain and no danger in this method, and it will bring out any corn, hard or soft, completely, root and all, no matter how deep growth. It is the surest and safest corn remedy that we have ever sold. Use it tonight and get rid of that painful, torturing corn. 20c, by mail 22c.—(Advt.)

The wage earner whose labor enables others to ride is a lot more of a man and is far more useful citizen than is the man of a little two by four character who objects to the smell of honest sweat.

Make This the Time to Buy Pianos and Player-Pianos

It's Just Like Teacher's

NOW it happened that teacher was an excellent judge of those vital things about a piano that one doesn't see. There was the action, the touch, the balance preserved between treble and bass, aud above all, the sweetness and resonance of tone.

And teacher had graduated from a well equipped College of Music where she had seen Kingsbury Pianos subjected, month in and month out, to the strain of all-day teaching and practice. They were durably built—held their tune and tone, proving the excellence of their materials and careful workmanship. But, it's more than a great school piano. It is for it has all those refinements of line that good taste dictates. It is made in the dull satin finishes, as well as highly polished, and in three different woods and five different models. While admiring its made-to-order appearance, you will marvel at its low price.

PARALYZING THE STATE.

The climax to Georgia's dishonest and inexcusable tax system has come in the first unmistakable symptom of paralysis of her educational institutions. That is the significance of the attitude taken by representatives of the several branches of the state university before the appropriations committee. One by one, beginning with the university proper and including each adjunct, they told the committee they would this year deprive themselves of all suggested and much-needed plant improvement and prune their estimates to cover naked maintenance. The effect of this voluntary abnegation on their part is that—

THE STATE OF GEORGIA, WEALTHIEST OF THE SOUTHEASTERN STATES, WILL FOR THE FORTHCOMING YEAR DENY TO THE INSTITUTIONS EQUIPPING ITS FUTURE CITIZENS ANY ALLOWANCE WHATEVER FOR EXPANSION, LEAVING THEM WITH FUNDS BARELY SUFFICIENT TO KEEP OPEN THEIR DOORS.

The meaning of this situation should come like a blow between the eyes to every man in Georgia who is not awake to the demand for tax reform. For unless cognizance is taken of the situation threatened paralysis will, sooner or later, become actual.

This is not a sudden crisis. The strain is of years' duration and has been aggravated at each session of the general assembly. And that is simply for the reason that Georgia is a living and expanding and not a dead state. It is a primary law of nature that nothing stands still. It either advances or it goes backward. The higher educational system of Georgia has advanced as Georgia's population has increased and exerted greater pressure upon its facilities. It has now reached the limit of expansion under the long-standing handicap imposed by Georgia's wretched fiscal system, UNLESS THAT SYSTEM IS REFORMED AND THE FUNDS FOR GROWTH ARE QUICKLY FORTHCOMING THE SYSTEM WILL NOT SIMPLY STAND STILL—IT WILL INEVITABLY GO BACKWARD!

The unselfish attitude of the state's educational institutions in yielding without protest to the condition of the treasury is a challenge to the manhood of the general assembly. The Constitution is unwilling to believe that it will not be met by courage to revise the tax system that travesties honor and efficiency, substituting one for it that will lift a disgrace from Georgia.

The university proper sacrifices, for one thing only, a central heating plant that would pay for itself in a few years and justify itself in the first year in encouraged health and efficiency of students by emancipating them from the present worn-out and inadequate equipment of stoves and fireplaces.

The Technological school is forced to abandon a power plant, given to it by friends on the understanding that the state would supply only a building. The building would have cost about $30,000. The plant to be donated is valued at $75,000.

The State Normal School at Athens and the Girls' Industrial School at Milledgeville will continue to be compelled to turn away hundreds of matriculates each year.

The school for mountain boys at Dahlonega will be forced to get along without repairing a burned building, substantially crippling the work of education.

Other institutions must make similar sacrifices. The eleemosynary institutions are in the same boat, proportionately.

All these evils and injustices are bad enough. But THE CRIMSON EMBARRASSMENT in the calendar of a state's shame is the fact that an army of common school teachers—men and women who are instructing Georgia's children—have for seven months gone without one penny of their small pay for services rendered. The few who have been paid have been driven to shylock their scrip at from 8 to 25 per cent of its face value. This spectacle is not of a single year's occurrence. It has been recurring and becoming worse each year since the system was established forty-four years ago. Why? For the fundamental reason that successive legislatures have been unwilling to grapple with the problem; they have preferred to let these men and women who are safeguarding posterity from illiteracy go unpaid twelve months after their salaries were earned rather than compel an adjustment of Georgia's system of taxation. This is not simply mismanagement; IT IS PLAIN THIEVERY!

Georgia is one of the richest states in the country, all things considered. One asset, the state road, has a sufficient valuation to retire the entire public debt and leave a margin of from seven to ten million dollars. The road will never be sold, but the resources it represents are indications of Georgia's prosperity. As to all recognized taxable values, Georgia is tremendously wealthy—far more than any other southern state, except Texas, four times as large.

Why, then, do we annually pile up an increasing deficit, and why are our institutions brought actually to the verge of starvation and paralysis?

BECAUSE TAXATION IN GEORGIA IS DISHONEST AND INEFFICIENT TO THE CORE, AND EVERY LEGISLATOR KNOWS IT. Taxpayers in every county, from richest to poorest, pay the state what they please, not what they ought to. Property is returned by one man at one price, and property of exactly the same value by another man at half or one-third that price. The tax system is a pass-the-hat system; it is no stronger than the conscience of each individual taxpayer. And that is why a state tremendously rich appears a pauper and a prospective bankrupt.

The governor is alive to the situation. The speaker of the house, the president of the senate, and the chairmen of the finance, appropriations and ways and means committees and the members of these committees are alive to the crisis. It is up to the legislature to manifest a similar alertness and to act upon it. And the task must be done at this session.

It looks, too, as though the task will be done. For not in [illegible] years has a more able or courageous legislature assembled in Georgia. This legislature is faced by the patriotic duty of disposing of an issue which it did not create, but which it inherited wholesale from many past legislatures. The tax problem has mounted higher from year to year, and been handed on down from one legislature to the other. The one now in session has shown a determined disposition to meet the issue once and for all. May that resolve remain uppermost.

The principal ingredients of the undertaking are that uniformity must be substituted for crazy-quilt irregularity in taxation, honesty for dishonesty. If that is not done Georgia may be next year menaced by an absolutely needless crisis hardly approached in gravity since reconstruction days.

IS COTTON THE "GOAT?"

We reproduce elsewhere an extract from The New York Journal of Commerce commenting on the proposed tax on cotton futures. A rider to the new tariff bill provides that transactions in cotton futures shall be taxed one-tenth of a cent per pound, the tax to be refunded should actual delivery be made. The authority quoted by The Journal of Commerce believes such a measure would completely demoralize the cotton industry throughout the south, visiting large loss on farmers as well as on merchants.

Another feature The Constitution thinks the finance committee and the senate might well investigate is that relating to any possible discrimination. The measure contends, by implication, that speculation in cotton is subversive of legitimate business, otherwise the tax would not be imposed. We do not undertake to say if this principle, speaking from the economic point of view, is right or wrong. We do know that gambling in cotton has, in years past, been the cause of much loss to the south. But if it be set up as a legal axiom that dealing in cotton futures is harmful, would not the same principle logically apply to dealings in stock futures, in provision futures and grain futures?

If it is desirable that future transactions in cotton be checked or made to yield a revenue, is it not equally desirable that such transactions in other farm products, and in stock deliveries, be subjected to the same process? As we see it, the issue does not affect cotton alone. It affects every commodity or article to which it is customary to apply the speculative method.

If this is true, would it not be well to make inquiry to the end that if restrictions of this nature are to be thrown around cotton they should also be thrown around other commodities? If this is not done, what may happen? Say the experiment regarding cotton proceeds, and the principle of taxing transactions in futures is shown to be unsound. Then all other commodities are exempted, and cotton becomes the "goat." And cotton has already played that role among other farm and industrial products long enough.

Since the tax is included in the tariff bill, it is fair to assume that the finance committee regards it a revenue measure. If that is true, then the products of all industries should be put upon the same plane. The matter is of sufficient importance to warrant careful deliberations on part of both senate and house.

MONEY ATLANTA LOSES.

Brooks Morgan, chairman of the manufacturers' committee of the chamber of commerce, said the other day that hardly a corporal's guard of Atlantans realized that over 1,000 articles for daily use are manufactured in this city. He used this statement as an argument for the establishment of a permanent manufacturers' exposition. He described his recent visit to Cincinnati and described how that city had almost solved the problem of encouraging home industries through its permanent exhibit. It is fortunate that the chamber of commerce and the manufacturers of Atlanta are taking cognizance of these conditions and that preparations for a permanent exhibit are now under way.

Preference for the foreign label seems almost inborn in our people. With the south particularly it is a product of the reconstruction era, when very few articles were manufactured in this section and when it became a settled custom to rely for them upon other parts of the country. Since then, the south has developed marvelously in the industrial sense. Indeed, for several years our manufactured products have exceeded our agricultural products in value.

Atlanta has shared proportionately in that development. The manufacturers' exposition held here last August was a sledge-hammer demonstration of that fact. Exhibits covering most of the articles required in daily life were on display. The exposition was a revelation to the average Atlanta. And that was regardless of the fact that a large percentage of the manufacturers in this vicinity had not entered the exhibition.

It would be a task to estimate how much money Atlanta annually sends to other sections for goods that can be bought in the home market of the same quality and at less or equal price. The Constitution has been arguing with the farmers of Georgia to cease the practice of contributing to other sections for the feedstuff they should produce at home. The same principle applies to manufactured goods. The millions of dollars sent out of the state each year by this and other cities for articles that are made in Georgia should be kept at home. This is no prejudiced plea against foreign-made goods. Many articles cannot be produced in Georgia. These will naturally be bought from without the state. And, in any case, the home-made article must compete with the imported article and should be given no handicap for the simple reason that it was made at home.

But where all things are equal it is to the interest of the community to patronize the home manufacturer. He is not the only one benefited. Every dollar turned loose here is a contribution to the prosperity of each factor, running the entire social gamut.

A WEEVIL DEAD-LINE.

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, would protect the South Atlantic cotton states from the boll weevil by establishing a dead-line in the state of Alabama, recently invaded by the pest. His idea is that if a zone is established from the Tennessee river to the gulf, in which the cultivation of cotton shall be prohibited, the weevil will be confined to the southwestern states. It is claimed that a large part of Alabama, all of Georgia and the remainder of the states would thus be protected.

The scheme seems more ingenious than feasible. In the first place, cost argues against it. Enforcement is another obstacle. It is estimated that to be effectual the zone should be fifty miles wide. The proposal is for the government to pay for the cotton not planted in this tremendous area. Now, the expense would be large enough for one year. But when it is considered that this sum must be paid every year, or so long as the weevil is a menace, the proposition takes on other proportions.

Though it has been hot enough, so far the legislature hasn't raised the roof.

No foreign diplomat has expressed himself as having been benefited by Bryan's grape-juice treatment and water-cure.

(From New York Journal of Commerce.)

A well-known spot cotton merchant from the south who has just returned from Europe discussed the measure with a representative of The Journal of Commerce yesterday. He said:

"The rider attached to the tariff bill by the democratic caucus in the senate, reported to have been submitted by Senator Clarke of Arkansas, imposes a tax of one-tenth of a cent a pound on all cotton sold for future delivery, with a proviso that should said cotton be delivered on contract against the sale for future delivery the one-tenth of a cent a pound should be refunded to the seller.

"This, at first reading, is a very innocent rider, but upon analysis it becomes a very expensive rider to the cotton producers of the south.

"The system of trading in contracts for the future delivery of cotton is one that has grown to such an extent that it enables the farmer to dispose of his cotton at times when the spinner is not buying for his immediate use (should prices be satisfactory) and enables the spinner to accept business which is offered for shipment many months in advance at a time of the year when he does not wish to put the cotton in his warehouse and at times could not do it because the cotton of the quality he required to make the manufactured goods would not be available. It further enables the American spinners to do the business in competition with foreign spinners, for the foreign spinners were the first to avail themselves of the advantages of trading in cotton for future delivery by utilizing (through the cotton merchants) the Liverpool contract market for the future delivery of cotton.

"A very small proportion of the American cotton crop is ever delivered on contract of sale on cotton exchanges, the future delivery contract being one purely of an insurance nature, to enable the merchants to handle the cotton economically, insuring him against price fluctuations in the raw commodity.

"There are hundreds of thousands of bales carried daily by spot merchants throughout the south, and the world, for that matter, crude cotton from the farmer at times when it is difficult to make a sale to a spinner, and the merchant, in order not to speculate, sells contracts for the future delivery of cotton on some cotton exchange to cover the cotton he has that day bought from the farmer. This cotton is of various grades, as the farmer picks it from his plantation, and it may be of interest to state that there are some cotton merchants operating in the south that run as high as 75 class marks, each having a different value and a different use in the mills.

"Under the Clarke rider these contracts for the future delivery of cotton (which the spot merchant sells as a 'hedge') would have to pay a government tax of one-tenth of a cent a pound; consequently its price to the farmer would be reduced accordingly, for the price which the spinner would buy would only be governed by the price at which he could sell his goods.

"The extensive hedging operations which the merchants of the country have to do (to keep from speculating) would pay this tax of 50 cents a bale to the government, if the merchants would buy as readily from the farmer with the tax as they do today without the tax, which is the all-important question. It does not seem logical that cotton merchants would tie themselves up with an enormous lot of spot cotton which they could not sell to the mills on which the government tax would have to be paid in cash all the time the hedge sale was made on some cotton exchange and await indefinitely to see whether the cotton would be delivered on contract or the contract transferred by purchase from some other seller and the cotton shipped to the mill or whether it would be delivered on contract on some cotton exchange and the tax refunded.

"People who have given much thought to this subject believe that as soon as this becomes a law the buying power of merchants in the south, large and small (particularly the small ones), would be curtailed 50 per cent at least. In other words, where there were two bales of cotton bought in a community, if this rider becomes effective, there would be only one."

Tax Inheritance, Urges Banker.

Editor Constitution: Business on such an unbusinesslike basis as the tax system of the state of Georgia must result in disaster.

We are indebted to the Home and Farmstead, of Athens, Ga., for the tabulation of the census valuation of land in the different counties and the value at which these lands are returned to the tax receivers. The extremes are:

	Tax Valuation.	Census of census Valuation.	Returned at per cent value.
Hart county	4.92	29.06	.16
Burke county	8.01	12.51	.21
Screven county	8.07	12.96	.22
Camden county	11.91	4.26	2.24
Glynn county	11.97	4.27	2.78
Richmond county	23.33	16.99	1.37

There can exist no shadow of equity in the bearing of tax burdens, where such unequal returns are allowed and accepted by the state. No better material can be contributed toward increasing the personal following of the pernicious socialists than is shown by the fact of one man paying twice as much ad valorem taxation as another.

A man of large estate can not conscientiously give in his property for taxation below or above the valuation as returned by his neighbors. Every large estate, after the death of the owner, appraises several times above its tax return value. And this brings to mind the nearest possible approach to an equitable system of taxation. A tax on inheritances.

A tax founded not upon the payer's valuation of his own property, but upon the sworn appraisement of disinterested appraisers.

A tax not on a man struggling to create wealth, but upon that which the creator can not himself carry or enjoy.

A tax which automatically equalizes tax burdens.

A tax, and the only one, that reaches the so-called unearned increment, i. e., the constant increase of land values in proportion to population. Inheritance taxation was advocated by Governor Joseph M. Brown in two of his messages to the state legislature; again we find the measure indorsed by Governor John Marshall Slaton.

Both of these altruistic patriotic men advocate this system of taxation, not to put a burden upon others, but because it is equitable, just and right.

When the leading men of the state, upon whose property the burden will heaviest fall, advocate the enactment of such a law by the legislature, where can be found an excuse for its further postponement?

Call me to journey on
To happy lands that lie afar,
And be a neighbor to some star.

WAS RICHARD III. ABHORRENT TO LOOK UPON?

Historians have pictured Richard III., of England, as a person abhorrent to look upon. They have painted him ill-shaped, undersized, homely of both face and figure and yet it would appear that this king has been greatly maligned so far as his personal appearance is concerned, and that instead he was a soldier of fine form, some pretensions at good looks and of great personal strength and courage. Who is correct? Shakespeare paints him a hunchback.

The latest edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Tradition represents Richard as deformed. It seems clear that he had some physical defect, though not so great as has been alleged. John Stow told Buck that old men who remembered Richard described him as 'well and boldly form comely enough. Extant portraits show an intellectual face characteristic of the early renaissance, but do not indicate any deformity."

Both Hall and Speed draw an exactly similar picture of Richard. Hollinshead also described him as "small and little of stature, his body greatly deformed, his countenance cruel and savoring of malice, fraud and deceit." His very birth is described as having been a monstrous and unnatural one. The Chronicler Rous says: "I have often heard my mother say his monstrous birth foreshadowed his monstrous proceedings, for he was born with all of his teeth and with hair to his shoulders."

According to Camden "of body he was crooked-backed, hook-shouldered, sprawl-footed and goggle-eyed. His face was little and round. His complexion was swarthy. His left arm from his birth was dry and withered." Such were the representations in mind and body which ignorance and prejudice frequently delighted to attribute to Richard of Gloucester.

Let us turn, however, to the other side and note the difference. What a much more attractive picture is painted by contemporary writers, more than one of whom was not only familiar with the person of Richard or had actual converse with him. From them we learn there is no evidence to corroborate the distorted and ridiculous pictures drawn of him by the chroniclers, who wrote under the Tudor dynasty. Neither the "Chronicle" of Vroyland, nor William of Worcester, nor Abbott Wethamstede, nor the other of the Fleetwood "chronicles" makes allusion to any deformity in the person of Richard of Gloucester.

Rous, another contemporary, bitterly prejudiced as he is against Richard, contents himself with affirming that he was small of stature, having a short face and uneven shoulders, the left being lower than the right. But even Rous seems to admit that his countenance was not totally disagreeable.

His face is said to have borne a resemblance to that of his father, the Duke of York, a likeness which was alluded to by Dr. Shaw from the pulpit at Paul's Cross before a large concourse of people. Richard himself being present. However, the Rev. Dr. Rich he stated before them that "the special pattern of knightly prowess, as well in all princely behaviors as in the lineaments and favor of his visage, representing the very face of his father."

Had Richard been the deformed and unsightly object he has been pictured the crowd would no doubt have replied to the idle flattery with a shout of derision. Philip de Commines, who must have often seen Richard in company with his brother, Edward, twice speaks of the latter as the most beautiful prince he had ever seen. Surely, therefore, if there had existed any remarkable contrast in the personal appearances of the two kings, it would have been pointed out by the gossiping and free-spoken historian.

Again Stow, who was inquisitive and curious in regard to the habits and personal appearance of Richard III., could arrive at no other conclusion than that he was "of body especially comely, though only of low stature.

Lastly, the old Countess of Desmond, who had danced with Richard, declared to more than one of her admirers that he was the handsomest man in the room, except his brother Edward, "and very ill made." It would seem apparent that, while Richard III. may not have been a beauty by any means, he was surely not so bad in personal attractiveness as he has been painted.

Fra Angelico.

They called him angel brother, for his smile
Was amiable like angles, and he loved
To paint them ever on the convent walls;
Yea, in his very cell he made them sing
And praise and weep Lord Jesus and the Maid,
While all his fellow monks looked raptly on.
No wage he took for work, and ne'er began
To paint an angel till he breathed a prayer;
And by that prayer and from that dreaming hand
Came pictures tremulous with worshipping,
Each beholding them are fain to say:
"Angelico the artist loved what things
Are high and holy, and his tender soul
And shows to men a half-forgotten heaven."

The flower-like name of Florence sounds twice fair
Because he worked within her walls of fame
And on the heights of lovely Fiesole
Floats like a Presence his sure pure renown.

(DeKalb New Era.)

If you move from the country to town you have to buy new school books. If you move from one town to another you have to buy new school books. Also if you move from town to the country you have to buy new school books. Good business for the "book trust," but sometimes rather hard on the poor man with a large family. Can't be helped, however—"book trust" needs the money.

Governor Slaton's Big Task.

(Barnesville News-Gazette.)

Governor Slaton has a big task on his hands to get the finances of the state government in better condition, but with his experience as a legislator and his ability as a business man, he will evidently make a big step in that direction during his administration. It is a worthy task.

SORORITIES AIDING GIRLS IN THEIR WORK

By H. J. Pearce, Ph. D., (Wuersburg), President of Brenau College.)

The word sorority is but recently coined, but its meaning is quite clear, especially to those who know the classics. It means literally a "sisterhood," and is used to represent an organization among college women similar to the fraternity among college men.

The disposition on the part of some of these organizations of women to use the term fraternity instead of sorority is rather to be deplored. Fraternity is an older and better established term, but its significance is already well understood, and has no more proper application to a band of sisters than the term brothers would have to a pair of sisters.

The cause of womanhood, nor even the cause of equal rights as now understood, will not be best advanced by an assumption of masculinity on the part of woman. The writer is willing to accord to woman any right or even privilege which she seriously desires, and which she is seriously convinced will add to the sum total of her happiness and prosperity, except—and here must draw the line—the right to change her feminine nature. To call herself a man or apply to herself masculine terms will not in any wise hasten her emancipation, but it might indicate a disposition to overvalue that which is purely masculine and undervalue that which is purely feminine. This is to be deplored.

Object of Sorority.

The prime object of both the fraternity and the sorority is mutual help and encouragement. Each member assumes a certain amount of responsibility for the welfare and happiness of the others. All other features connected with the organization are incidental and secondary to this prime object.

There are naturally minor variations in the form and in the method of presentation of the ideals of the organizations. These variations are due sometimes to fundamental differences in the sororities themselves—some having ideals more elevated than others. Again in different institutions the chapters of the same sorority differ by reason of the character of the individual membership and the ideals of the institution in which it may be located.

In isolated instances when sororities have been found to be detrimental the reason may be found in local causes and conditions. The object of every genuine sorority is ennobling and membership in it is a benefit to the individual. If pride, arrogance, extravagance and folly creep in it is the faul tof the officials of the sorority or of the college, and not of the sorority idea itself.

Advantages.

The advantages of the sorority to the individual member are two-fold, first the assistance which she receives from her associates and second the qualities of leadership and breadth of sympathy which she develops as a result of the demands which are made upon her. Perhaps the second is even a greater advantage than the first.

There are many ways in which the members of a sorority help the new and immature members. In her school work the sorority demands that she shall acquit herself creditably, and the laggard student is constantly spurred on to greater effort by her sorority sisters, and if necessary an older student is appointed to give her definite and systematic coaching in her more difficult studies. On the other hand the sorority rejoices in the academic victories of its members, and acclaims them as heroines and shining examples of the virtues of the sorority.

In a disciplinary way the sorority is of much benefit to its members. A breach of college discipline on the part of one of its members is accepted by the sorority as a reflection upon its own honor and reputation, and its refractory member is sometimes dealt with more summarily and effectually by the sorority than would be possible by the college authorities.

As a social unit the sorority is also an advantage to its members. It is natural and proper to form social groups wherever many individuals constitute a community. There is no loneliness so complete and depressing as that of the individual who is lost in a crowd, and who among the multitude can turn to none with the assurance of finding in that one a sympathetic friend.

But the greatest benefits in the sorority, as in all the relations of life, are derived not from what its members receive from each other, but from what they give to each other.

Development of Leadership.

Perhaps the first and most important of these is the development of leadership. The membership of the sorority is small and each member has to perform some duty. As she grows older in years and in college residence her responsibilities increase. The seniors, usually only three or four in number in each sorority, must carry the burden of leadership. But they pass out of college and a new group takes up the responsibility. Thus the writer conceives to be the greatest advantage of the sorority. From its ranks will be the leaders among the women of the future. Of course, this leadership is developed in the student body also. But there the number who can be leaders is too limited and these small social groups offer the opportunity for training in leadership which may find expression in leadership in the larger college activities and is certain to find some expression in the homes and communities in which the future lot of the student may be cast.

The opportunities for developing leadership are not limited to the local chapters merely but the more representative girls attend the national conventions and conferences, and come in contact with young women from other colleges, and consider problems which affect the life and interests of students at large.

Of great advantage to the sorority girl is the almost certain acquirement of self-control. Her own interests must always be rexarded as secondary to the interests of the sorority. And in thus subordinating her desires, whims, appetites, even her welfare to the good of others, she attains a self mastery which is the highest end of education.

The greatest value of the home consists in the feeling of responsibility on the one hand, and of obligation on the other, which the individual members have for each other. In the large institution there is a danker that this feeling of responsibility and obligation may be lost, and it sometimes happens that the college student, freed from the restraints and influence of home, may be carried away by excess and self-indulgence.

Influence Like That of Home.

The sorority in a measure takes the place of the home and home influence in these large institutions. In some colleges the members of the sorority, fifteen to twenty in number, live together in detached houses on or near the campus, under the chaperonage of the mother of one of the members or possibly of some member of the college faculty. Here the girls and the chaperon come eto know each other intimately, and social life of the sorority of the home are reproduced and yet there is the enthusiasm and interest of college life.

The only serious objection which the writer has heard raised against the sororities in some institutions is that they are exclusive and many girls of fine ability cannot get in because they are not fashionable or pretty. The cure for this evil, if it exists, is to provide enough sororities to accommodate all students who desire to become members. If at the same time the ideals of the students are elevated and if they are properly instructed the faculties of the kind indicated will be met rarely if ever.

College life, whether of men or women, presents some difficult and complex problems, and it is not likely that any institution now affords conditions which are entirely satisfactory either to parents or college officials. The writer, after extended observation, believes that one of the most helpful and hopeful influences in college life is the sorority and its analogue, the fraternity, and that through these or similar organizations the evils of college life will be eliminated.

REMORKABLE GROWTH OF TECH SCHOOLS

their clovers, legumes, rotation of crops, scientific application of fertilizers, that we are calling for aid. And the results justify the prophecy that within another decade the revolution in the treatment of our soil will be as great as the revolution in agriculture in the last thirty years.

There is a great work in the south to be done by this higher scientific education. We are confronted by new problems and new conditions. The farmer is face to face with a changed order of affairs to which he must adjust his occupation or be crushed.

The machinist, the miner, the engineer must be equipped with all the skill and knowledge of modern science or he will be out-stripped by the expert who comes from other fields. Here, within the borders of the south, are prodigious resources, all undeveloped. But there are two factors in the economic make-up of any community, the land and the man, and the latter is by far the prebondenant partner. Every boy born into the world should be put into the way of maintaining himself in honest independence. No education that does not make this its first aim is worth anything at all. And this is the primary aim of technical education. Knowledge, indeed, is power and the advent of better things for the south is happily prophesied by the widespread interest in technical education.

GOOD COOKING WOMEN LIKED BY THE EDITORS

Corydon, Ind., July 12.—Mrs. Samuel Ralston, wife of Indiana's governor, told the Indiana Democratic Editorial association here yesterday she believed a woman's place was at home rather than elsewhere.

ATTENTION

Parents desirous of sending their boys to an institution that emphasizes all the different phases of an education of young men, will do well to investigate this College. The Literary Departments are in charge of men of long personal training and years of experience. Each is a specialist in his line. The College does not employ amateur instructors.

THE MILITARY COLLEGE OF THE SOUTH

The Military Department is under the supervision of an officer of the United States Army. Strict, but not harsh, discipline is encouraged and kept. All forms of athletics are carried on here under the censorship of the instructors. The social and moral side of the students receive particular attention. The students are not left to solve the social and moral problems and questions that come to them alone; each instructor is delegated to a certain number of students to look after their moral and social development.

The institution is not operated on the dollar-and-cent basis—it is not run for profit—each dollar spent is spent for the welfare of the student.

The College has as its home the building of the old State Capitol—rich in historical romances and stories which make for the greater patriotism of the students. The buildings are equipped w ith all modern conveniences. All advantages of present-day institutions are to be had here. Fall term opens September 2.

Geraldine Farrar's Generosity

Previous to her departure for Europe Geraldine Farrar sent to the principal of the school she attended in Melrose, Mass., a check for $250, which she asked might be spent for the benefit of the school. The money came in very handy, for the school had recently purchased a talking machine, but had little money left with which to purchase records. The first use put to the money was the acquisition of a complete set of Miss Farrar's own records. With the rest of the money other records of great singers are being bought and the beginning of a valuable library of this kind has been made.

NEAR MIRACLE NEEDED TO AVERT RAIL STRIKE

Garretson Thinks That the 100,000 Trainmen in the East Will Go Out.

New York, July 12.—Representatives of the 100,000 trainmen and conductors who threaten the eastern railroads with a strike for a wage increase deferred formal ratification of the recent strike vote at a conference concluded late today.

A. B. Garretson, head of the Trainmen's Brotherhood, said tonight the leaders were undecided whether to approve the vote at a meeting to be held tomorrow, in view of the conference called for Monday in Washington, to be attended by President Wilson and other government officials, at which efforts are to be made to avert an industrial conflict.

It was announced that W. S. Stone and W. S. Carter, heads of the engineers and firemen's brotherhoods, respectively, both of which obtained increases through arbitration, will attend the white house conference. Mr. Garretson said they have been authorized to represent their brotherhoods.

Former Mayor Seth Low, president of the National Civic Federation; Ralph M. Easley, chairman of that body's executive committee, and Marcus M. Marks, chairman of the mediation committee, attended the meeting today. They urged the trainmen to delay decision until after the Washington conference and invited them to be represented at it. Mr. Low described the purpose of the conference and what measures it was proposed to take toward the Erdman act with a view to facilitating arbitration.

"Unless there is something akin to a miracle I am afraid a strike will be ordered," declared A. B. Garretson, representing the trainmen.

Members of Conference Committee.

Washington, July 12.—Secretary of Labor William Wilson tonight made public the names of the representatives of the railroads and of railroad employees who will confer with President Wilson, the secretary of labor and leaders in congress in an effort to arrange a common ground upon which the government, the railways and the unions of railway workers can meet for the settlement of future wage troubles.

Representing the railroads will be Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania; Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio; George W. Stevens, president of the Chesapeake and Ohio, and Frank Trumbull, chairman of its executive board, and W. G. Brown, president of the New York Central.

Representatives of the employees will be Warren S. Stone, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; W. S. Carter, of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, and possibly A. B. Garretson, of the Order of Railway Conductors, and W. G. Lee, of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Senator Newlands, chairman of the senate interstate commerce commission, Representative Clayton, chairman of the house judiciary committee, Representative Mann, republican leader of the house, President Seth Low and Chairman Ralph M. Easley, of executive council of the National Civic Federation, also have signified their acceptance of the president's invitation.

CHILD LABORATORY FOR IOWA UNIVERSITY

Iowa City, Iowa, July 12.—A child laboratory will be established at the University of Iowa next year as the central factor in the plans of the university announced today to make a state-wide survey of delinquent children. Professor R. H. Sylvester, of the University of Pennsylvania, will have charge of the work.

On request, experts from the university will visit any city in the state to study sub-normal children and advise as to their care. At the laboratory cases will be handled much in the same way as are cases in medical clinics.

Statewide Primary.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 12.—The statewide primary bill passed by the last legislature was approved tonight by Governor Tener. The act which becomes affective this fall, provides that all candidates from United States senator and governor down to election precinct officers must go before the people for nomination. All political conventions are abolished.

ATLANTA'S ENGINEERS ENJOY BIG BARBECUE

Association for Advancing Prosperity of City Organized Saturday Afternoon.

Seventy-five of Atlanta's prominent members of the various engineering bodies gathered at a big barbecue at the pumping station Saturday afternoon for the purpose of organizing an association in which all of the technical engineers of the city will be included for the purpose of advancing Atlanta's prosperity, representative members of the following societies being present:

American Society of Civil Engineers, American Institute of Architects, American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American Chemical society, American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Engineering Association of the South, all having local chapters. Besides these individual representatives of the American Society of Mining Engineers and of the National Electric Lighting association, American Society of Municipal Engineering, American Waterworks association, American Public Health association were in attendance.

After an old-fashion Georgia barbecue, with all the trimmings, the meeting was called to order by Allen M. Schoen, president of the local section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, who briefly outlined the object of the meeting and the means employed to bring it about.

He called upon James Nisbet Hazlehurst, chairman executive committee of the American Society of Civil Engineers, who spoke on the movement and its advantages and made an especial plea for a wider participation of the technical man in public affairs.

Mr. Hazlehurst was followed by L. J. Hill, Jr., president of the Atlanta section of the Engineering Association of the South, who chose as his topic the advantages of affiliation by the different technical organizations.

The American Institute of Architects being asked for an expression, were represented by Hal Hentz, who spoke strongly upon the needs of professional advice where technical matters were involved, referring especially to this need in the matter of city parks and buildings.

J. S. Bregden, of the Georgia section of the American Chemical society, explained the need of the chemical engineer in the many commercial developments of the section.

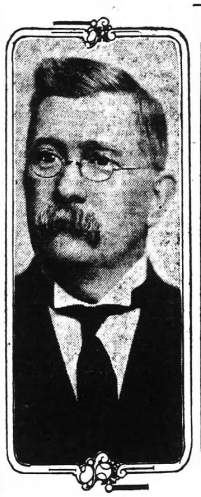
He was followed by Park A. Dallis, of the Mechanical Engineers, and his theme was the need of organization and the benefits of fraternal association.

Upon motion of Professor T. P. Branch, duly seconded, the following members of the several separate organizations were continued as executive committeemen: James Nisbet Hazlehurst, L. J. Hill, Jr., Hal Hentz, W. T. Heath, Park A. Dallis and A. M. Schoen, with instructions to formulate a plan for permanent organization with by-laws governing same.

The chair then called upon the following gentlemen, who expressed themselves as in entire accord with the movement and elaborated certain general ideas along these lines: Captain R. M. Clayton, chief of construction city of Atlanta; A. C. Bruce, a prominent architect; V. H. Kriegshaber, of the chamber of commerce, F. H. Granger, member of the Franklin institute and also member of the American Mining Engineers; Professor G. N. Mitcham, of Auburn Polytechnic and Alabama state highway commission. Brief addresses were also made by Professor H. P. Wood, of Georgia School of Technology; Paul Norcross and others.

The meeting finally adjourned subject to the call of the executive committee and thus was launched an affiliated society of technical men doubtless destined to be of great materiality to the general advancement of the city and each representing in concrete form the true Atlanta spirit.

Personnel of Committee Assures Success For Permanent Manufacturers' Exhibit



J. K. ORR.

W. H. WHITE, JR.

V. H. KRIEGSHABER.

J. T. ROSE.

M. M. DAVIES.

BROOKS MORGAN.

When the chewing, stick whittling fraternity on the porch of the country store say that "er furrer aint no straighter in ther long run than ther man at ther plow handles," they are simply voicing an old adage which springs from the effects of the great South Sea bubble—maybe—"an enterprise is no larger than the men behind it."

Judged by such standards, the permanent exhibit of Atlanta manufacturers should be a success. The men on the chamber of commerce committee represent the best of Atlanta's citizenship. The best that she has to offer for progress and permanent prosperity.

You might call them the first citizens of Atlanta. Certainly they have been on the firing line in many a battle for Atlanta's welfare. They are generals in the army of industrial progress. They carry the standards of commercial enterprise.

Today they are planning a campaign which will make Atlanta rank as the best known manufacturing center of the United States. They are for Atlanta, first and last, and all the time.

There are some names which the general public sees almost daily in the public print in connection with the commercial progress of a city.

Have you seen these names in Atlanta papers before? Brooks Morgan, Rolling H. Jones, J. K. Orr, V. H. Kriegshaber, M. M. Davies, J. T. Rose and W. H. White, Jr. Of course you have. And these men compose this manufacturers' committee. Brooks Morgan, a man of keen foresight, is chairman.

It is extremely rare, indeed, that a general is put in command of an army who has never been on the firing line, who knows nothing of military tactics.

These men are experienced. Most of them were on the committee which made last year's exhibit of Atlanta-made goods a rip-roaring, howling success.

man of affairs in a big city. He is the man at the helm, and if the permanent exhibit is a success, which it will be, he will receive credit due for work well done.

Then there is Jones—Bolling H. if you please, and our postmaster appointed. Mr. Jones makes stoves now at the Atlanta Stove works, and turns out some of the finest hollow-ware in the country at his factory at Birmingham, Ala. He is a man with the happy faculty of quick judgment, and his presence on the new committee will prove most helpful. Only last year he was on the committee which made such a success of the manufacturers' exhibit.

J. K. Orr. This is the same J. K. Orr who did the state of Georgia a most excellent service by raising the endowment fund of Agnes Scott college. And with the aid of Marion Jackson he saw that the money was piled up for Atlanta's new Y. M. C. A.

He was chairman of the committee which handled the recent Presbyterian assemblies—the greatest gathering of that body in the world. He is president of the Atlanta Merchants' and Manufacturers' association, and about the quickest man at repartee on the committee.

V. H. Kriegshaber is a big man in more than any two ways. By profession he is a civil engineer. By occupation he is a conceiver of ideas for Atlanta's good. A second vice president of the chamber he has more than once lent that body most estimable service. He is a man of practical affairs. As a director of the Atlanta Terra Cotta works he has brought much capital to Atlanta. Though a native of Germany, he is a citizen of Atlanta, He is versatile, and possesses a keen judgment which is one of his marked attributes.

There is an old, old saying that every committee must have a printer in its midst. And here is where M. M. Davies, of the firm of Foote & Davies enters. Mr. Davies was a member of the committee which made last year's exhibit famous, and will see to it that the permanent affair will be a matter of pride to Atlantans.

Public Spirited Man.

The name of J. T. Rose, superintendent of the Atlanta Steel works, was quite prominently mentioned in connection with that now noted last year's exhibit. And naturally, Mr. Rose was placed on this new one. Mr. Rose is one of the big public spirited men of Atlanta, a man who has helped to make famous "the Atlanta spirit."

W. H. White, Jr., is a man who right now is a man-maker. As the main spirit behind the White Provision company, he has attained an enviable success. Starting his plant in direct competition with the big western houses, many predicted failure—and that soon. Mr. White just shook his head, smiled, and succeeded. He is the chairman of the chamber committee on cattle.

And incidently, just to show you what kind of man he is, he has taken Willie Taylor in charge, and is giving him the chance of his life to grow into a man.

These are the men who will make a success of the permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods.

THEFT IS CHARGED TO FATHER CRESCINI

Rome, July 12.—Father Crescini, custodian of the Church of San Marial in Trastevere, titular church of Cardinal Gibbons, has been arrested, charged with the theft of a picture, "Madonna and Child," a masterpiece of Giovanni Bellini. In November, 1911, there was a fire in this church and apparently the Bellini masterpiece was destroyed. Recently it was found in Florence, and, according to the police, Father Crescini was responsible for the fire which he set for the purpose of concealing the theft of the picture. The masterpiece was sold for $800.

SHOWERS ON SUNDAY PROMISES FORECASTER

"Showers on Sunday" is the forecast of the Atlanta office of the United States weather bureau for today. Saturday was one of the coolest days of the summer. The minimum temperature was 71 degrees and the mercury rise was imperceptible, reaching its highest point in the afternoon at 82 degrees. There was .24 of an inch of rainfall in the morning.

The rainfall will not be confined to purely local showers and all Georgia is in line for more rain during the day. Indications are that the showers through Alabama and the west are clearing up, though more rain is predicted in the Carolinas and adjoining eastern states.

Separated from her friends and playmates, Ida Lou Reilly, who had been sent by her stepfather to live with her aunt, in Gainesville, pined for her companions in Atlanta.

Her aunt, Mrs. J. R. Harwell, refused to let her make the trip by herself. Her stepfather, too, was afraid to let her venture alone into the city. She decided to come, anyhow, and saved $5 for railroad fare and incidental expenses.

Late Saturday afternoon she stole away from home, bought a ticket to Atlanta and climbed aboard the 7:45 o'clock train. Within two hours she arrived at the Terminal station, very undecided as to what to do and very fearful that she could not find her way along the city streets.

She is only 12 years old, and when her aunt missed her she immediately notified relatives in Atlanta. Police headquarters was requested to make a search, and Plain Clothes Policemen Hughes and Fortson were sent to the Terminal station.

In the meantime Ida Lou had found herself swallowed up by the human whirlpool in the Terminal waiting rooms. She was dazzled by the brilliant lights, and the noise and roar dumfounded her. She grew more fearful as each moment passed, and it took a lot of courage to venture to the edge of the plaza.

There were so many streets going so many ways and so many things and people going in so many different directions that she dared not walk out alone. She suddenly grew homesick, and walked up to Stationmaster Pope for instructions about the next train that went toward Gainesville.

The next train would leave at 8:45 o'clock. It was then 8:30. She curled her tired body down on a bench and fell fast asleep. The hat she held in her hand dropped to the floor, and she was slumbering when Hughes and Fortson walked in.

They carried her on a street car to police headquarters. Her stepfather is Ellison Freeman, who lives at 16 Capitol place, but she didn't want him to know she was in town. Her intentions were to return home just as soon as she had visited her playmates, she said, and it wouldn't be necessary for her parents to know anything of her trip.

She had $3 and some odd cents in her hand, and willingly agreed to stay with Matron Bohnfeld until 8:45 o'clock this morning, when she will be sent back to Gainesville.

ALLEGED WIDOW SEEKS STRATTON'S MILLIONS

Denver, Colo, July 12—Mrs. Michael Kennedy, of Leadville, Colo., today filed a suit against the trustees of the W. S. Stratton estate, the Myron Stratton home and in the International Trust company alleging that she is the widow of W. S. Stratton, millionaire miner who died in 1905, leaving an estate of $5,000,000 to the state for a home for indigent citizens of Colorado. Stratton was believed to be a widower at his death. The home has not been built.

Mrs. Kennedy demands half of the Stratton estate, and that the trustees erect and maintain the home with the other half. The complainant alleges that she and Stratton were married in St. Augustine county, Texas, January 1, 1874.

Madras Negro Killed.

Madras, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—The dead body of John Allen, colored, was found yesterday afternoon by the side of a road. Although it looked at first as though the negro had been killed by a fall from his mule, further investigation indicated foul play. It is believed that Allen was attacked and killed and his body strapped to the mule by his assailants to avert suspicion.

MISS MORDECAI KILLED BY BURSTING OF TIRE

Troy, N. Y., July 12.—The bursting of a tire on the wheel of a touring car carrying a party of South Carolina people, near the residence of George Foster Peabody, on the Belton road, Lake George, this afternoon, resulted in the death one young woman and the more or less serious injury of all the others in the party. The victim was Miss Gertrude Mordecai, of Charleston, S. C., the daughter of Judge T. M. Mordecai, of that city. The most seriously injured is Miss Hanna Polk, also of Charleston. Her arm was broken and she received bad bruises about the head and body.

The bursting of the tire caused the car to crash into a tree and the occupants were thrown in all directions. Miss Mordecai was pinned beneath the wreckage. She was alive when removed and was placed in Mr. Peabody's car, but died on the way to a hospital.

TWO CORDELE WOMEN INJURED IN RUNAWAY

Cordele, Ga., July 12.—(Special.)—As a result of serious injuries sustained when a horse which she was driving became frightened, overturning the buggy of which she was an occupant, as it dashed wildly down one of the residence streets, Mrs. John Whitsett remained in an unconscious state for more than two hours this morning.

Miss Estelle Holt, who was also in the buggy, sustained painful though not serious injuries. The ladies were thrown violently to the ground, Mrs. Whitsett falling on her head and shoulders. She suffered a severe nervous shock and two ribs were broken where the buggy pinned her beneath it. She will probably recover.

STATE CHAMBER MEETS APPROVAL

From All Parts of the State Come Letters Indorsing the Plan of a Central Body.

Ever since the preliminary announcements of the proposed organization of a state chamber of commerce was made, letters have been pouring in from all parts of the state indorsing the proposition and giving assurances of the heartiest kind of support to the movement.

The response from every part of the state being so hearty and encouraging those behind the plans for a state chamber of commerce have decided to have on the 23rd of July in Atlanta a meeting of representative men from all over Georgia, at which time formal organization will be perfected.

There is apparently a general recognition of the fact that the chamber of commerce work of the state should be tied together in concrete form with an efficient head to the work, for the benefit of all established as early as plans can be outlined and all arrangements made.

The trade bodies of Georgia, working independently and in a haphazard manner, without any general head for the direction of the forces and energies of those bodies, have accomplished wonders for the state. But there has been a growing recognition of the fact that if these bodies of the state were joined together their accomplishments through united effort would be more than doubled.

Need of Organization.

That there is needed a strong organization for the purpose of keeping before the nation the wonderful growth and remarkable attractions of the state at large, is also recognized, and in the state chamber of commerce the state would have a force at work at all times, advertising and boosting through the nation Georgia as the greatest state in the American union.

The keynote of the entire movement is co-operation. The bankers, the merchants and the business men of each community will work together with the farmers of their district, aiming to bring better results.

This will encourage the upbuilding of home production, yielding more ready money. It will stop the drain of money now sent to the northwest for feed. It will relieve Georgia of the humiliating disadvantage of raising loans to make crops, and will encourage the growing of feed stuffs at home, thereby saving Georgia the $50,000,000 which is yearly sent north and west for such products.

Naturally, one asks how this magic is to be accomplished.

To start with, each local chamber will do all things incidental to the welfare of that community, such as encourage good roads and rivalry with other counties. The state organization will perform such functions as may be for the welfare of the whole state wherein the collective strength is needed.

This state institution will be entirely divorced from private gain; its expenses will be maintained pro rata equitably and its books and correspondence will be subject to investigation at all times by every member.

So much for the organization itself. Placing the matter in an extremely large nutshell, the state organization will do such things as induce each town of sufficient population, not already organized, to form a local trade body.

In addition to the development of manufacturing, city improvement and their duties within the scope of trade organizations, the present system of state improvement will be reorganized as never since the days of John Wesley at Savannah.

Encourage Road Building.

Road building of a permanent kind will be encouraged. Friendly rivalries between the counties as to greatest mileage of good roads constructed in a certain time in ratio of population will be encouraged.

This keynote of rivalry will be carried throughout. By this manner, as by no other can the public spirit of a county be aroused. Men are simply grown-up boys, some sage once remarked, and when you get the men of one county pulling against those of another, there will be as intense rivalry as between two football teams on Thanksgiving day.

This rivalry will extend to the encouragement of schools.

Better health conditions will be had by requiring the physical examination of school children; by teaching the rudiments of health and the care in the rural schools, by establishing county and local sanitary regulations.

The diversity of crops will be fostered, as well as the promotion of Georgia's live stock and dairy industries; the state board acting in conjunction with the county board, will induce business men of the towns to provide public hay-presses, warehouses, cold storage for perishables; to establish creameries and develop a ready cash market in the towns for hay, corn, butter and eggs, truck crops and like rural industries that bring in ready money throughout the year, and at the same time fortify against the approach of the boll weevil.

A booklet will be prepared under the direction of the state agricultural department, giving all the material facts of Georgia which an incoming settler would desire to know and giving it county by county.

Practical Advertising.

A fund will be created to keep the name of Georgia in the large northern and northwestern periodicals, inviting the readers to write for literature. The replies will be classified according to the wishes of the enquirers and furnished the local board of each section which is thus concerned, and such boards may take up the matter with the enquirer direct, with a view of securing him as an investor, or settler, or both.

The governing body of the state institution will probably be composed of one member from each congressional district, which shall meet bi-monthly; this meeting place will be different points throughout the state, as Rome, Augusta, Savannah, Macon, Albany, Columbus and Atlanta, so that during each year all parts of the state will be visited by the meetings, where the various local bodies in that particular section by governing board may meet with the board and confer. This will enable the organization to work for every section of the state impartially.

The board will co-operate and work in harmony at all times with the representatives of the state agricultural college, the state experimental station, the various farmers' institutes, demonstration work, boys' corn clubs, girls' canning clubs, etc.

One of the most important functions of the board will be the encouraging of better marketing conditions for cotton and other staple products.

Georgia men with the interest of the state at heart are back of this gigantic movement.

Many Letters Received.

Mr. Haden has received hundreds of letters not only from citizens in every section of Georgia, but from over the United States as well, approving of a movement which is destined to place Georgia at the forefront in agricultural pursuits. Sentence extracts from such letters read as follows:

"It will encourage the agricultural regeneration of the state." Joseph D. Davis, Albany, Ga.

"A campaign such as you propose is the best way to get the state of Georgia before the public with its wonderful opportunities." G. L. Williams, capitalist, of St. Louis, Mo.

"The concerted effort of resourceful men for the purpose of establishing facilities for analysis, research and study of all agencies for the state's good should be met with success."—Morris G. Sheman, New Jersey state chamber of commerce.

"I congratulate the citizens of Georgia on what I know will be a successful movement."—Herrendeen, Geneva chamber of commerce, Geneva, N. Y.

"You can count on the Waycross board of trade to assist you in every movement."—W. E. Sirmans, president.

"This plan under consideration should be fully effective and very successful."—Hugh G. Keegan, capitalist, of Fort Wayne, Ind.

"The Morgan county chamber has evolved into the one flexible tool by which the true cohesive progress of the state to its God-given destiny can be accomplished—the county chamber fitted to be joined to like organizations in a state-wide federation."—C. G. Bradley, general secretary of Morgan county chamber of commerce.

R. J. Nelson, a prominent operator of Chicago, wrote to Mr. Haden: "You people in Georgia have taken hold of the problem of development on the right track. There is a rich future for the state chamber of commerce."

The citizens of south Georgia especially have rallied to the call. Replies by the hundreds offering co-operation, have poured in. And when the meeting of county representatives is held on the 23rd of this month, the success of Georgia's state chamber of commerce will be assured.

MANY OLD VETERANS, NEEDING PENSIONS, HUNT FOR COMRADES

Three letters have come to The Constitution within the past two days from people who are hunting for the comrades of old confederate veterans in order that the aged soldiers may qualify for pensions. Such letters are coming all the time in to the newspaper office, and it often happens that comrades of fifty years ago are thus found and by this means the pensions secured.

Two letters are written by friends of the veterans, instead of by the old soldiers themselves.

"Would you kindly give a few lines of space in behalf of an old soldier of the lost cause?" writes Miss Elma Miller Slaughter, of Louisville, Ky.

"His name is John Zachariah Hudges. He is a Georgian and enlisted some years before the close of the war at a camp situated between Decatur and Atlanta. He recalls one officer named Colonel Bob Henderson and another named Captain Halsey, or Hulcee. Hudges became ill and while he was sick his regiment marched away. On recovering he joined another command, either Cheatham's or Morgan's. If someone who knew him will aid him in securing his pension by writing to my address, he will receive lasting thanks." (Signed) Elma Slaughter, 40th and Western Boulevard, Louisville, Ky.

The second letter is written by W. McD. Felder, of Elko, Ga., in behalf of an old, invalid confederate veteran named Jimmie Davis, who left Macon in 1862 or 1863 in General Cobb's regiment, Captain Priggett's company.

"He would like to find out if Captain Priggett or Mr. George Washington Adkison, or any of the company or regiment, is still living, and would appreciate any information," writes Mr. Felder.

The third letter is from a confederate veteran named H. K. Akins, whose address is Winnsboro, Texas. He says he belonged to Company I, of the 42d Georgia regiment, from March to August, 1864, and wants to find anybody that remembers him.

The Reason.

(From The Baltimore American.)

"What kind of actors are the ones they call 'hams'?"

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

History of the Presbyterian Church in Georgia. By Rev. James Stacy, D.D.

Among the religious publications that have attracted wide attention in Georgia, especially since the recent Presbyterian assemblies in Atlanta, is the "History of the Presbyterian Church in Georgia," by Rev. James Stacy, D.D.

No preacher who ever lived and labored in Georgia was better known or had more friends than Dr. Stacy. For 42 years he was pastor of the Presbyterian church at Newnan, and for 33 years he was stated clerk of the synod of Georgia.

At the request of the synod, in session at Griffin in 1905, that Dr. Stacy assumed the difficult task of preparing a history of the growth of Presbyterianism in Georgia.

Dr. Stacy's work traces the history of the church to the very first Presbyterians who landed in Georgia, as far back as 1735. They were a band of Scottish Highlanders, with their pastor, Rev. John McLeod, who was Georgia's first Presbyterian minister. In very engaging narrative form the history is then traced through its many stages to the present-day organization and work of the synod of Georgia. The various chapters go into the detailed history of the separate presbyteries in the state, while the internal development of Presbyterianism in the cities of Atlanta, Savannah, Augusta, Macon and Columbus receives also particular description.

Of particular interest are the chapters devoted to religious education in Georgia, containing a full and vivid history of Oglethorpe university, Owing to the fact that a concerted plan is now on foot toward the re-establishing of Oglethorpe, at Silver Lake, near Atlanta, the history contains vital and interesting data concerning the checkered career of this university, as far "rose with great promise—ephemeral as the opening flower—but only for a season, for like a burning meteor it blazed for a time only and then went out in the darkness of night."

In the recent publication of this remarkable history, great credit is due to the Rev. C. I. Stacy, of Elberton, a nephew of the beloved Dr. Stacy, who, since his uncle's death, has labored faithfully in completing and editing the work.

The Jews of Today. (Die Juden Der Gegenwart). By Arthur Ruppin. Translated by Mary Bentwich. With an introduction by Dr. Joseph Jacobs, who says: "Life is interesting, if not happy," quoting the lines from Sir John Seely with reference to the Jews who have had the unfortunate knack of attracting the world's attention to themselves for the last 2,000 years. Indeed, the modern Jew is anomalous enough to attract the attention of the world. He is always raising a whole Cadmean crop of questions, economic, demographic, religious, social, eugenical, even political. Are the Jews of today direct descendants of the Israelites of old? Are Jews a people, a nation, a sect, or a race? Is there a specific Jewish culture differing from the civilizations of the nation among whom they live? Is there is Jewish music, a Jewish art? What is the cause of the comparative superiority of the Jewish intellect, if there be such superiority? These are but samples of questions that have been raised in our times about Jews, and still lack definite answers."

Dr. Jacobs very interestingly discusses the points raised in this book by Dr. Ruppin which will be appreciated both by the Jew and others, as well as this wonderful work of the author's, who, after studying law and economics, entered the Prussian state service. He has written upon the "Theory of Value," expounded by Thunen, and on Darwinism and sociology, etc. He was the founder and first editor of a popular Jewish work of eight volumes, has helped to found a bureau of Jewish statistics, etc., so that he writes on matters Jewish with the fullest knowledge of all the information that can be obtained.

Dr. Ruppin has been a resident of Palestine for a number of years, and is, therefore, in a position to write of the solution of the problem which he now proposes in the above volume. (Henry Holt & Co., New York city.)

Some Influences in Modern Philosophic Thought. By Arthur Twining Hadley, president Yale university. This is the fifth series of the lectures of John Calvin McNair before the University of North Carolina. The author treats his subject from the standpoint of the sociologist rather than from that of the psychologist; and this is what gives this little volume its distinctive character.

By the will of the late John Calvin McNair a course of lectures was established at the University of North Carolina whose object should be to show the mutual bearing of science and theology upon each other. (Yale University Press, 25 Fifth avenue, New York, or New Haven, Conn.)

Experiments in Government and the Essentials of the Constitution. By Elihu Root. Published by the Princeton University Press, Princeton. A very interesting series of lectures on experiments and essentials. Not only are political parties denouncing old laws and demanding new ones, but essential principles embodied in the federal constitution of 1787, are questioned and denied.

John Marshall and His Home. By Mary Newton Stanard. Last March the home of Chief Justice John Marshall in Richmond was formally opened to the public. This home was given by the city of Richmond for the preservation of Virginia antiquities, and the little pamphlet, published by the association, is on sale at the John Marshall House, Richmond, Va. Price, 50 cents.

Thomas Jefferson. His permanent influence on American institutions. By John Sharp Williams, United States senator from Mississippi. While there is no American whom more has been written about than Thomas Jefferson, his followers never grow tired. The author of these lectures, while writing and delivering same was also devoting some of the time to campaign the presidency one of Mr. Jefferson's followers—Governor Woodrow Wilson. Mr. Williams in the preface explains the great pressure he was under on account of the lack of time. (Published by Columbia University Press, New York.)

Ancient History. By Hutton Webster, Ph. D. This volume needs no introduction and is a very valuable work for teachers in all schools. (Published by D. C. Heath & Co, Boston.)

The Psychology of Laughter. By Boris Sidis, M. A., ph.D., M. D. "The cause and nature of laughter have been examined by many thinkers, each one contributing his mite to the analysis of this highly complex phenomenon. What is laughter? What is its source?" The subject of "Laughter" is in a very readable form and the main principles of the work can be easily understood and the reader is also convinced that the ludicrous and the comic are of important in mental life. (Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

NEW NOVELS.

Stella Maris. By William J Locke. "If you wish to be lifted out of the petty cares of today read one of Locke's novels! You may select any from his fifteen titles and you will be sure to meet some new and delightful friends."—Baltimore Sun.

Stella Maris, his latest novel, his strong powers of invention show up to great advantage. For the moment you forget the beauty you found in "The Beloved Vagamond, the love story of "Marcus Ordeyne," or "The Glory of Clementina," for it is like none of these, and yet you do not forget the author, but realize that he has indeed woven another wonderful story. (Published by John Lane Co., New York.)

Barbara. By Alice and Claude Ashaw. The beautiful Green Isle is our landing place and this new book by popular authors is full of the brightness, pathos and charm of Ol' Ireland. Barbara, an Irish lassie, full of impulsiveness, fickle moods, combined with womanly beauty and charming manner, is skillfully drawn out of the channel of the usual heroine whom we have learned to easily recognize upon the stage of fiction.

The Friendly Enemy. By T. P. Cameron Wilson. Another very dramatic novel about slum life, a story of social wrong, a keen realization of the great difficulties in the way of righting it. It presents the loaning after better things and the rebellious spirit displayed against things as they are. (Published by G. P. Putman's Sons, New York.)

The Mission and the Method Of Modern College for Girls

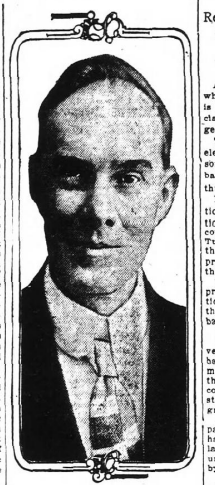
President of Cox College, College Park, Ga.

The mission of the college is two-fold: to educate and to inspire. By education is meant the drawing out and developing the individual gifts, talents and abilities of the student and training his faculties to deal with the fund of facts and information that the centuries have stored away for him.

Through astronomy and geology he learns of the formation of the world and traces its history through the earth itself until man takes up the record and preserves his thought in buildings, in science and in art. When greater progress brings about a written record, the student passes quickly through the achievements of the Chaldeans and Egyptians, sits at the foot of old Parnassus and draws his inspiration from the civilization and military feats and the fine arts of the peerless Greeks. Thrilled with the conquests of the Roman eagles, he follows their victorious flight over continent and sea and studies with wonder the progress in commerce, arts and science that invariably springs with their passing. In modern times the development along all practical lines is nothing short of marvelous. Wireless telegraphy and aerial navigation are among the feats accounted impossible a few years ago. Hence it comes that through college instruction we are the heirs of the knowledge that has been accumulating through all the past ages, and a young student under 20 years of age, by virtue of study and research, is in reality more than 4,000 years old in his knowledge and information.



WILLIAM S. COX,
President Cox College.

Yet this storehouse of knowledge is of no value through the training of every faculty by which it is to be utilized may be faultless unless there is some vital force and energy of purpose to convert it into strong and efficient service for the good of mankind. This inspiration and insight into human values comes most often from contact with college men and women whose lives have been consecrated to the training of the young into high and holy endeavor.

The Methods Employed.

The college accomplishes its mission by means of systematizing, individualizing and socializing its instruction.

The system of the college, consisting of its faculty, equipment and curriculum, is worked out today almost scientifically. Here, as everywhere else, organization produces the best results. This principle is true in the military field, it is true in the commercial life of a nation, it is true in the religious world, it is true in every sphere of human activity.

A chartered institution, organized, corporate, with fixed policies and permanent organization, appeals to the student and public. The private teacher, no matter what his individual worth, here today and gone tomorrow, is of little value to the educational world. College associations are among the most powerful factors of college training. Friendships formed at school are among the most lasting and influential. Therefore, the older the institution, the greater its history, the larger its number of alumni, the greater becomes its prestige and usefulness.

The modern college recognizes the right of the individual to develop along the lines of its own nature. Square pegs will not fit in round holes. The old stereotyped college course will not produce the highest type of men and women nor the greatest efficiency in the work the world has a right to expect of college alumni. The curriculum should be sufficiently broad to afford a variety of selection—some courses strengthening and supplementing, others softening and adorning the severer discipline.

Special Training.

Besides the general the college must furnish special training. In this are of specialties, it is indeed true that a person must know everything about the one thing he elects as his life-work. Experts are needed in the economy of human affairs and receive the highest remuneration for professional services.

After all, what does a college education do for the individual? A college graduate who has been trained in his profession, is not only prepared for his lifework, but goes forth with confidence in himself, and his mission, inspired with a desire to do the best that in him lies, determined to do something and be somebody in the world. The great reformations of the world have been achieved by educated men. The great republics of today have been founded by college-trained workers. China and Japan both owe their onward strides to the impulse given by students who were educated in this country and Europe.

Statistics furnished by the government show that from a list of 8000 persons who have rendered distinguished service to their country, only thirty-two have risen without the aid of an education. The world moves by brain, not brawn, and the college of today is furnishing its motive power.

MAKES CONVENTION DELEGATES ELECTIVE

Representative Beck Has Bill to Create All Party Machinery at the Polls.

A proposed primary election law of which Representative Beck, of Carroll, is the author, has been made a special order for its next meeting by house general judiciary committee No. 1.

The bill is modeled after the primary election law that has been enacted in some of the northern states, and that barely failed of passage in New York this year.

It prescribes that all party nominations shall be made by primary selection, the primary election for state and county offices to be held on the second Tuesday in July. Rigid safeguards are thrown around primary elections to prevent improper interferences with the voter.

The most sweeping changes in the present system, however, are those sections of the bill which provide for all the party machinery to be created by ballot.

Would Choose Delegates by Ballot.

Delegates to state and national conventions are to be elected by popular ballot, as well as the executive committee of the party. It is provided that four members of the executive committee shall be elected by the state-at-large and two by each congressional district.

No party shall be allowed to participate in the primary election unless it has cast at least 20,000 votes in the last preceding presidential election or unless it is backed by a petition signed by at least 10,000 qualified voters.

State and County to Pay.

The expenses of holding the primary election is to be borne equally by the state and county, and each political party is forbidden from levying assessments of any kind on candidates.

One of the most rigid features of the bill is the section which prohibits any person except the duly authorized managers and clerks to be nearer than 100 feet of the voter at the time he casts his ballot.

It is hardly expected that the bill will pass without amendment, but there is a growing sentiment that a primary law of some kind is needed, and certain features of the measure will meet with strong support.

3,500 LBS. OF TOMATOES FROM THIRD OF ACRE

Thomasville, Ga., July 12.—From a third of an acre of land Charles Pittman, farming about two and a half miles from Thomasville, has recently gathered 3,500 pounds of tomatoes. These tomatoes were of the finest variety and all perfectly sound and good. They were grown by Mr. Pittman for the purpose of canning and he has been busy of late putting them up. His intention is to market them and they will, no doubt, command the best prices. Several other of the farmers near town and in other sections of the county are engaged in the work of canning tomatoes both for home consumption and for marketing and it begins to look as if soon the merchants of this section will be able to buy much of their canned goods at home, even though there is no canning factory. The crop of tomatoes in south Georgia has been the finest this year that has probably ever been known and a great many have been shipped to the northern markets. The prices received have been unusually good and dealers report that the quality of the Georgia tomato is superior to any other received this year.

Women of Georgia, Show Your Power on These Vital Questions

By Isma Dooly.

As the tax problem and teachers' problem are settled or ignored, the welfare of the child of this state is advanced or neglected. These issues reach into every home. They are going to arbitrate the destinies of tomorrow's citizens. They are a little abstract and require study on the part of the women of Georgia, and the time for that study and intelligent and immediate action has come.

Of more than striking interest at the time was the urgent suggestion made by a Georgia club woman last fall at the state convention here that they—the women of Georgia—should at once create in their organizations study classes in political science and public questions. The time has come to act on that suggestion, for each day the obligations of women require that they post themselves and be equipped to meet the calls made upon them to co-operate in all public movements.

Let us for the moment leave the subject of women voting out of the question and see their value as they are. Let us test their value in pushing questions which deal directly with their most essential center of activity—the home.

THE HOME AND TAXES.

There is not a home in Georgia which is not affected by any law which deals with taxes, and there is not a home in Georgia which roofs a child which is not related directly to the school. This brings the teacher and the mother logically very close together; makes them through the child people of inseparable interests. Upon the teacher the mother puts her most precious care when she consigns the child to the teacher to carry on the direction of the training she (the mother) has begun. The teacher, on the other hand, has not only her obligation to the mother to fulfill, but her obligation to the state and society, when she becomes a factor in civilization second to none other.

The other day the very startling statement was made in the Georgia press that the school teachers of Georgia had been unpaid for their services for several months, and that there was no money in the treasury to pay them.

Time for Action.

The wise-minded at once began to agitate tax reform as the most direct remedy to come to the aid of the exhausted treasury, and much is being said and written on the subject.

It is timely for the women of Georgia individually and in organization to rise to the situation as they did once before when they put their influence back of the measure which made it awful for counties to borrow money for the payment of teachers, the movement to bring about such legislation first agitated by the Woman's club of Bainbridge.

Will the women not come forward again and urge upon the present legislative body the need for direct action?

Education and Taxes

We are told that this is the day not only of education, but of specializing in education—that the child cannot get on any longer with the merely basic training, but that he must be trained on and given a chance to meet with the demand for specialists made in every branch of commerce and industry. How can the child of the state of Georgia have the first and most primary chance which is his, if the teachers of the common schools of the state are expected to work for charity and are not given the pay which is rightfully theirs?

Is the child of the state to extend its hands to outside aid for education?

Are the mothers of the state of Georgia going to remain silent when the men and women who have faithfully rendered service to their children are left unpaid for their services?

Help Find the Remedy.

There must be a remedy and it is up to the women of Georgia who are mothers, who are patriots, who are anxious to see the child of Georgia take its place with the child of other commonwealths who are taught by well-paid, consequently well-equipped teachers, to help find the remedy.

What can be done? may be the question asked. It is up to the women of the state to investigate what can be done. They can look into the remedy suggested of tax reform, and see how if that is the remedy, it can be in the quickest way brought about.

It would seem to me that for a moment everything should be made second to the investigation the women of Georgia have a right to make into the affairs of state, as they directly effect the child of the state. And having posted themselves they would be in a position to co-operate intelligently with the men of the state who now are perplexed with many questions which just as directly affect the women of the state as they do any other individuals.

A realize with intense appreciation the wonderful efficiency work the women of Georgia individually and through organizations, have done for the avancement of educationd. Their activity and practical form of work have taken the time they might have given to the study of the questions now pressing upon them, and they are dazed almost by the story that comes to them, that the teachers of their children are not paid, and the very basis of that education for which they have worked, is struck at in the most vital spot.

Let All Women Work.

I would like to see the leader of every woman's organization in the state, thoe patriotic, thoe for philanthropy—all of them, call a halt just long enough to plan a course of study which would embrace first and foremost a knowledge of the laws of their own state; and the conditions which have led up to the non-payment of the teachers of Georgia. Then they might reach out for the remedy, and, finding it, make for its application.

There are 28,000 women in the Georgia federation, and many more thousand in other organizations—the Daughters of the Confederacy, the Daughters of the Revolution, the Mothers' congress, the W. C. T. U., the Suffragists, the Parent-Teacher association. If only one-half of these would post themselves about the things going on around them sufficiently well to agitate the cause in their communities, and extend their knowledge and their wishes to the men sent to the statehouse to make laws, there would be no teacher in Georgia unpaid, and if tax reform was needed, tax reform would be.

It is the moment for the women of Georgia to come forward and put their shoulder to the wheel to push on the state's prosperity. In that way they can prove not only the value of their organizations, but their right to demand anything they want of the lawmakers of Georgia. And what all the women of Georgia wantthat they will get.

Superfluous Hair Truths

Stop Experimenting

There are but few depilatories sold. You think there are hundreds because you have used the same identical preparations under several different names. This is easily explained. Women stop using

So-Called Hair Removers

when they learn that they are harmful. Therefore, th y can not be sold under the same name for any length of time. Then the identical, worthless, harmful concoctions are given new names and advertised again as totally different preparations to who innocently buy them over and over again under different names, and this will continue as long as women are so unwise as to experiment with unknown, so-called hair removers.

DeMiracle
Has Stood the Test of Time

De Miracle has been sold as De Miracle for over eleven years, and its name has never been changed. It is acknowledged the world over by eminent authorities as the one safe, perfected hair remover, therefore if is the only depilatory you can use without experimenting.

Leaves No Tell-Tale Smell

If you use De Miracle it will be impossible for any curious person to know that you have used a hair remover because De Miracle evaporates immediately after accomplishing its work, therefore leaves no odor whatever. On the other hand, if you use any depilatory with a distinctive odor, an offensive, tell-tale smell will cling to your skin for hours.

Avoid Permanent Disfigurement

by refusing substitutes. If your dealer will not supply you send $1.00 direct. Free information how to determine which depilatories are harmful and worthless sent in plain, sealed envelope.

LEE MUST REMAIN BEHIND THE BARS

Solicitor Dorsey Does Not Believe the Negro Guilty of Any Part in Crime.

That Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey does not believe that Newt Lee, negro night watchman at the National Pencil factory, who was bound over by the grand jury with Superintendent Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan, is guilty, was the only matter of importance brought out yesterday at the hearing of the habeas corpus before Judge W. D. Ellis by which Lee's attorneys, Graham & Chappell, sought to free him.

Judge Ellis denied the motion for habeas corpus and remanded Lee back to the custody of the sheriff to await the outcome of Frank's trial. Attorneys L. Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold were also successful in their fight to prevent Frank being brought into court to testify.

Solicitor Dorsey declared that he had not brought a bill against Lee before the grand jury because he believed he had no evidence which would indict Lee.

The negro's attorneys secured from the sheriff a statement that Lee would be given more exercise, as the darkey declared that this was all that was troubling him. He said he was getting stiff from staying in his cell.

"Frank has the entire freedom of the jail whenever he wants it," declared Attorney Chappell, "and Lee ought to be allowed some chance to take exercise."

The character of the darkey and his love for the juicy fruit of a Georgia watermelon came out when Lee was being taken back to jail in charge of Deputy Pjennie Miner.

"Why don't you get Mr. Miner to buy you a nigh beer, Newt?" said a bystander.

"Ah don't want no beer; all Ah wants is er watermelon," replied the negro, and his large eyes rolled hopefully in his head.

"Ah ain't had er melon this summer, and it's the fust time that July ever come 'round without me having er melon."

WAVES TOO STRONG FOR REBUILT NIAGARA

Erie, Pa., July 12.—The wind on Lake Erie kicked up such a sea this afternoon that Captain William L. Morrison, commanding the naval training ship Wolverine, decided he would not trust the rebuilt Niagara, Commodore Perry's flagship, to the waves tonight, and the little fleet did not leave Erie harbor at sunset. Captain Morrison hopes to be able to tow the Niagara, convoyed by the naval training ship Essex, out of port tomorrow.

Work on the boat had been pushed day and night so that she might be ready for the voyage through the Great Lakes to visit several ports as the principal feature of other Perry victory centennial celebrations, and the task was almost completed. Nine o'clock is the hour set for her departure tomorrow and the little fleet is expected to reach Fairport, Ohio, the first stop, late in the afternoon. No attempt will be made to stretch the canvas on the old brig and she will be towed under bare poles. The towing vessel, the Wolverine, is the oldest iron vessel on the lakes.

Erie's week of celebration ended with the industrial pageant this afternoon. One of the largest crowds of the centennial participated.

HE SETTLED AFFAIRS, THEN KILLED HIMSELF

Chicago, July 12.—Kossuth H. Ball, former general manager of the Hammond Packing company, killed himself with a revolver shot here today after spending the morning in visits to banking houses where he methodically settled his affairs. He was 60 years old.

Mr. Ball had caused his chauffeur to drive him to the end of a boulevard to the prairie south of the city.

"Wait here, while I go for a stroll," he said.

He walked away a few hundred yards and was seen by several boys to stand a few moments as if in thought. Then he took out his revolver and fired a shot into the ground. Then he shot himself in the temple.

Mr. Ball was wealthy and his business affairs were in prosperous condition. His wife, however, was suing him for separate maintenance as a result of family troubles extending over several years.

BANKER HUTTIG DIES IN THE ADIRONDACKS

New York, July 12.—Charles Henry Huttig, president of the American Bankers' association and of the Third National bank of St. Louis, died today in his summer home in the Adirondacks, according to word received here tonight by Frederick E. Farnsworth, secretary of the American Bankers' association.

St. Louis, July 12.—A telegram was received tonight announcing the death of Charles H. Huttig.

Mr. Huttig had been ill more than a year and had not been at his desk since last January. His health had been declining since he underwent an operation for a complication of diseases in September, 1911. Last spring he went to his summer home on Lake Honnedaga, N. Y., chiefly to rest.

Mr. Huttig is survived by his wife and two children.

JOHN E. M'CLELLAND HEADS NEW LAW FIRM

Together With His Sons He Has Law Offices in the Atlanta National Bank Building.

In new offices, handsomely and conveniently equipped on the tenth floor of the Atlanta National Bank building, fronting both Whitehall and Alabama streets, Hon. John E. McClelland and his eldest son, John Spence McClelland, have joined hands in the practice of law, a profession to which the elder McClelland has given years of his life, and upon which the younger enters as a graduate from the University of Georgia.

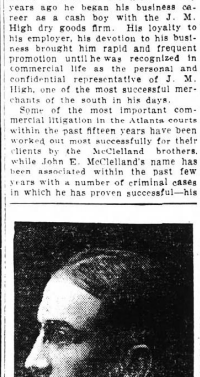
south, especially in the practice of commercial law, dissolved. L. F. McClelland retaining the offices in the Temple Court building, where the firm had been located for years. The dissolution was brought about by the withdrawal of J. E. McClelland so he might associate with him his two sons, John Spence McClelland, a graduate of the state university, and a member of the Atlanta bar for more than three years, and J. R. McClelland, the second son, now a senior in the Atlanta Law school, to whom a diploma will come at the end of the next term. In the meantime, J. R.



JOHN S. McCLELLAND.

McClelland will be in charge of the collection and financial work of the new firm.

Few members of the Georgia bar have shown greater ability in the legal profession than John E. McClelland, senior member of the firm. Thirty years ago he began his business career as a cash boy with the J. M. High dry goods firm. His loyalty to his employer, his devotion to his business brought him rapid and frequent promotion until he was recognized in commercial life as the personal and confidential representative of J. M. High, one of the most successful merchants of the south in his days.

Some of the most important commercial litigation in the Atlanta courts within the past fifteen years have been worked out most successfully for their clients by the McClelland brothers, while John E. McClelland's name has been associated within the past few years with a number of criminal cases in which he has proven successful—his

John Spence McClelland went through ...e state university with an excellent record, and had been practicing law two years when he was taken so severely ill that his recovery was not expected for several months.

Of unusually striking appearance, physically, his pleasant manners make him easy a prominent memver of any gathering in which he may be found. Full of life, now that he has fully recovered, and ambitious of success in his profession, John Spence McClelland is sure of advancement and preferment as he works his daily life in Atlanta, his home forever, as he says.

ENDEAVORERS PLAN TO CLOSE ALL SALOONS

Los Angeles, Cal., July 12.—Twenty different meetings were held today by the delegates to the twenty-sixth International Christian Endeavor convention, at the most important of which Rev. Daniel A. Poling, of Columbus, Ohio, national superintendent of the temperance and the Christian citizenship divisions of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, outlined a program for the next two years. It is expected that his plan will be adopted on Monday as the official policy of the organization.

The feature of Dr. Poling's plan was the work to be done in the campaign which has for its object a "saloonless United States by 1920." Ultimately he said, he hoped there would be a federal constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor.

He declared Christian endeavor leaders were not satisfied with the prohibition bill introduced in congress by Representative Hobson, of Alabama, because of "loopholes" in it.

"The Hobson measure," he said, "seeks to prevent the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for use as a beverage, but does not go far enough. It should provide against the importation or exportation of liquor."

Junior and intermediate rallies were held today and tonight.

THREE GIRLS DROWNED IN SIGHT OF HUNDREDS

Norristown, Penn., July 12.—Three young women were drowned in the Schuylkill river within the sight of hundreds of persons this afternoon when their boat sprung a leak during a thunderstorm. The dead are:

Misses Mary Livergood and Emma Rex, of this city, and Miss Helen Green, of Philadelphia, daughter of the Rev. D. W. Green, pastor of the Chestnut Hill Methodist Episcopal church of Philadelphia.

The storm broke suddenly while the young women were some distance from shore. The boat sprung a leak and the girls, terrified stood up. Other boats started to their assistance but before they could reach them the leaking craft turned over. Three of the girls sank and did not come up. Margaret Green, a fourth in the party, clung to the upturned boat until rescued.

GIANT LOAF OF BREAD GIVEN TO THE STRIKERS

Paterson, N. J., July 12.—Strikers of the Paterson silk mills received today a single loaf of bread which will suffice to feed several hundred of the destitute. The loaf is 10 feet long and weighs 180 pounds. It was made by local No. 1000 of the Bakers' union in New York, to carry in the parade of union members in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the union. A cake weighing 150 pounds also was sent to the strikers.

VETERANS OF SEVENTH TO HOLD REUNION

The survivors of the Seventh Georgia regiment will meet in annual reunion on July 21 at Grant park.

Every member of the gallant old regiment is earnestly requested to attend this annual convocation and bring with them their wives, daughters and sons.

Veterans are requested to come early and bring well-filled baskets. Special invitation is extended to the widows, sons and daughters of all deceased members of the regiment.

FOR WORLD-WIDE PEACE BRYAN OUTLINES PLAN

Twenty Nations Have Accepted the Scheme of Secretary in Principle.

Washington, July 12.—A proposal to maintain the status quo as to military and naval prepartions among disputants during the period of investigation of international differences, constitutes the third and final proposal in Secretary Bryan's peace plan. In making that portion of the proposal public today, Secretary Bryan said that the obligation to maintain the status quo would not be obligatory in the event of danger to either of the two contracting parties from a third party.

The proposal, which he submitted to the twenty nations, which have accepted his plan in principle as well as to the other nineteen nations not yet heard from is as follows:

"This government is prepared to consider the question of maintaining the status quo as to military and naval preparations during the period of investigation, if the contracting nation desires to include this, and this government suggests tentatively that the parties agree that there shall be no increase in the military and naval program during the period of investigation unless danger to one of the contracting parties from a third party compels a change in said program, in which case the party feeling itself menaced by a third power, shall confidently communicate the matter in writing to the other contracting party and it shall thereupon be released from the obligation not to change its military or naval program and this release will at the same time operate as a release of the other contracting parties from its protects each party from the other in ordinary cases and yet provides freedom of action in emergencies."

The proposals previously announced provide for an international commission of five members, one from each of the contracting countries, to be chosen by the government, or to be chosen by each of the contracting countries from some other country, and the fifth to be agreed upon by the two contracting governments. One year is suggested as a proper time for the investigation of the subject under dispute.

"All of these suggestions," said Secretary Bryan discussing his plan today, "are presented for consideration, and not with the intention of imposing any fixed conditions. The principle of investigation being accepted, the details are matters for conference and consideration."

The twenty nations which have accepted the principle of the peace proposal in the order named, are:

Italy, Great Britain, France, Brazil, Sweden, Norway, Peru, Russia, Austria-Hungary, Netherlands, Japan, Germany, Bolivia, Argentine Republic, China, Dominican Republic, Hayti, Spain, Portugal and Belgium.

LOOKING INTO MIRROR, WINFREE SHOOTS SELF

Hopkinsville, Ky., July 12.—William P. Winfree, Jr., lawyer and clubman, and formerly a writer employed on newspapers in Nashville, Memphis and New Orleans, committed suicide here early this morning. Standing before a mirror, Winfree fired a pistol bullet through his heart. Ill health is assigned as the cause of his act.

Southern Train Kills Woman.

Asheville, N. C., July 2.—Passenger train No. 15, on the Southern railway, on which Secretary of State Bryan and Senator Luke Lea were coming to Asheville, ran over and almost instantly killed Miss Annie Williams, of Gainesville, Fla., a summer visitor, near Swannanoa, today. The lady was crossing the track and was seized with panic while a small nephew with her drew back and was unharmed.

A HINT TO THE WISE

Makes Furniture Last Long

A liquid varnish that flows as freely as water. Apply it like a polish with a piece of cheese cloth. It fills the pores of the wood—becomes a part of it—checking deterioration and restoring the original beauty of the grain. It leaves a smooth, hard surface that will not chip or crack. And the luster lasts.

Economical to Use

Because Tacco is so thin it spreads quickly and smoothly. A bottle of it will go three times as far as the same size bottle of any other varnish made. Big Atlanta corporations have proved this statement by tests measuring the amount used by spoonfuls. This, with the fact that one coat of Tacco is usually enough, makes it the most economical varnish offered.

Dries in 2 to 5 Hours

Thus it is convenient to use. No time need be lost. Begin at the parlor, say. Varnish the woodwork, then the furniture, in a few minutes. Work back to the last room on that floor. By the time that is finished the parlor and its furniture will be quite dry and ready for use.

Water, Heat and Dust-Proof

Washing and scrubbing have no ill effect on Tacco. As explained above, this varnish, unlike others, becomes a part of the wood. It is not only on it, but in it, so you can't chip or scrub it off. Being tough, but not elastic, when dry, Tacco is heat-proof. And thus it is also dust-proof. So it's an easy matter to keep furniture clean and looking like new, with no more energy than when dusting.

BOYCOTT PLACED ON KING GEORGE BY FELLOW MONARCHS.

London, July 12.—Since King George ascended the throne the doormat bearing the word, "Welcome," has been withdrawn from the entrance to Buckingham palace and now no foreign potentate need apply for week-end accommodation at the great house that was so popular a stopping place when the late King Edward dispensed his lavish hospitality.

A few weeks ago paragraphs went the rounds of the London press to the effect that King George and Queen Mary were about to pay a round of visits to different courts in Europe, and that these visits would be followed by a series of visits of different European monarchs to the English court. These paragraphs served somewhat to amuse those in the royal entourage, for they knew that King George and Queen Mary have little intention of visiting any European courts as they have of entertaining any reigning sovereign at any rate, in the immediate future.

The paragraphs at last drew an official contradiction of the statement that the king and queen intended visiting any European courts this season beyond such necessary trips like that to Berlin to attend the wedding of the kaiser's daughter. Nothing has been officially stated regarding the entertainment of royalties at Buckingham palace, but it is an open secret that King George has informed the premier that there will be no royal visits to the English court this year.

Czar Refuses to Boycott.

The czar of Russia alone has refused to take part in the royal boycott on King George. The czar and King George have been close and intimate friends for many years. Nicholas was brought to the English court as a young boy, and he at once took a fancy to the younger of King Edward's two sons. Among the collection of royal sluthbirge at Buckingham palace is still preserved the silver mounted gun which the future czar of all the Russias then bestowed on the future English king at the end of his visit.

The friendship that began between the two future monarchs during that visit has lasted ever since. They are regular correspondents, and have many tastes and ideas in common, and both are dispeptics. The czarina and Queen Mary are also tolerably good friends, so that a visit to Buckingham palace from the czar and czarina would be no means an unwelcome event, but for political reasons such a visit would not be popular in England, and it is extremely unlikely to take place—at all events as long as a liberal government is in office.

Between King George and the German emperor there always has existed a mutual antipathy. As a matter of fact, the kaiser has never been personally popular among the members of the English royal family, but the late English sovereign, for diplomatic reasons, went out of his way to make himself agreeable to his nephew, and during the late monarch's visits to the kaiser and the kaiserin were tolerably frequent.

Not Like His Father.

But King George, unlike his father, has neither the desire nor the ability to influence European diplomacy, and he has never troubled to conceal the fact that the kaiser, so far as he (King George) was concerned, was a guest whose room was preferable to his company, and the kaiser on his part has always treated his royal cousin with a sort of pitying superiority of manner that was extremely irritating to the English sovereign. As Prince of Wales he was compelled to submit to being patronized by the war lord of Europe, but since his accession King George has conveyed to the kaiser, and bluntly enough, that his cousin's superiority of manner is, now at all events, entirely out of place.

One of the first things that King George did when the question of the redecoration of the apartments of Windsor castle came up, after his accession, was to order the removal of a large marble bust of the kaiser from the room known as the red drawing room. When the kaiser was in England for the unveiling of the Queen Victoria memorial, his imperial majesty, when at Windsor castle, noticed that the bust had been removed and mentioned the fact to his host.

"Yes," replied King George bluntly, "it was a wretched work of art, and in a room of this sort was entirely out of place."

The bust was the work of an indifferent artist, but it was executed to order given by the late king to the artist and flattered the war lord immensely, who consequently liked it—could not quarrel with it—and had given him for its removal, but his reply to his host indicated his feelings on the matter.

I daresay it was a bad piece of work, but your father would not have removed it."

Round by Etiquette.

A few months ago the kaiser intimated his intention to King George of coming to England in the summer, and an invitation was, of course, given to his imperial majesty to stay at Buckingham palace. The invitation has not been accepted. King George, of course, knew it would not be, though he (King George) was concerned, was a guest whose room was preferable to his company, and the kaiser on his part has always treated his royal cousin with a sort of pitying superiority of manner that was extremely irritating to the English sovereign. As Prince of Wales he was compelled to submit to being patronized by the war lord of Europe, but since his accession King George has conveyed to the kaiser, and bluntly enough, that his cousin's superiority of manner is, now at all events, entirely out of place.

When the kaiser was in England for the unveiling of the Queen Victoria memorial, his imperial majesty, when at Windsor castle, noticed that the bust had been removed and mentioned the fact to his host.

"Yes," replied King George bluntly, "it was a wretched work of art, and in a room of this sort was entirely out of place."

The bust was the work of an indifferent artist, but it was executed to order given by the late king to the artist and flattered the war lord immensely, who consequently liked it—could not quarrel with it—and had given him for its removal, but his reply to his host indicated his feelings on the matter.

I daresay it was a bad piece of work, but your father would not have removed it."

Round by Etiquette.

A few months ago the kaiser intimated his intention to King George of coming to England in the summer, and an invitation was, of course, given to

Duke of York (now king of England). The news of the engagement had become known to the royal family but two days previously, though, of course, it had been anticipated and spoken about for some little time before in the Sandringham household, but Princess Maud flatly refused to believe it. When the Princess May arrived at Sandringham she was greeted by all the members of the royal family with the exception of Princess Maud, who had remained in her room in spite of her father's and mother's wishes to the contrary; later the Princess May went up to her future sister-in-law's room to receive her congratulations.

What took place between them no one but the two princesses know. The story is that the Princess May came downstairs an hour later crying, and that the Princess Maud got into very hot water with her father. The only account that the queen of Norway is reported ever to have given of that interview is the statement that "she told May the truth." Anyway, from that date there has always been a coolness between the two queens and neither would ever willingly become the guest of the other.

The king and queen of Spain were, of course, fairly frequent visitors to the English court in the late reign, but they will not be so in this. King Edward frankly liked the boyish king, and Alfonso had the greatest regard for the sovereign, who, among other things, taught him how to dress. But King George and the king of Spain have scarcely an idea in common; they bore each other to death and between Queen Mary and the queen of Spain there is even less sympathy.

Why They Object to Royalties.

But besides these personal reasons, there are others why King George and Queen Mary don't care about entertaining royalties at Buckingham palace. One of these is want of accommodation. The prince of Wales, pending the time when he will set up an independent establishment of his own, has been allotted a private suite of six apartments at Buckingham palace. Prince Albert and Prince Henry have been given three rooms each; the Princess Mary with her governess has a suite of five rooms, and Prince John's nurseries take up four rome. So that altogether there are twenty-one apartments less available for visitors than there were in the late reign. Buckingham palace is by no means a large royal residence and as it is now arranged it would be difficult to find accommodation for the considerable retinue of officials and servants that a reigning sovereign customarily brings with him.

There is one aspect of the absence of royal visitors from the English court that, when properly understood, reveals King George and his consort in the light of rather clever economists, and show how they cleverly foiled even the sharp Lloyd George. In 1910, when parliament was called upon to arrange the various salaries and allowances for the crown, Lloyd George stated in the house of commons that at King George's own desire it would be settled that his majesty in future should pay out of his own private purse all the expenses of entertaining foreign monarchs at the English court. During the past three years such expenses have been met by a special grant-out of the national exchequer. The chancellor of the exchequer (presumably as the result of a conference with King George) suggested that in return for the sovereign setting these heavy expenses out of his own pocket, all the revenues of the king and queen should be relieved of income tax that amounted to a annual charge of about $100,000, and the commons of course agreed. But since that date King George has not entertained any foreign monarch so that his majesty certainly has scored by an arrangement which her majesty, however, may be entirely credited with having planned. The Tecks come of a shrewd, careful stock, and Queen Mary inherits their shrewdness in a marked degree.

HATCHET IS BURIED BY SHAW AND WELLS

After Being at Odds for Years Authors Resume Friendly Relations.

London, July 12.—In the literary world, over here, the great news is that George Bernard Shaw and H. G. Wells have kissed and made up after several years of being, it is said, not even on speaking terms. Wells, who got back from a tour in Italy, went direct to his home in Essex, a charming old rectory which he has leased for several years, and lo and behold the very first visitors to spend the week-end with him were no other than Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Shaw.

That seems to indicate that the hatchet has been buried definitely and proves wrong a prognostication made recently in reporting that Wells had taken a house high in Shaw's, the Adelphi, to the effect that neither of these two giants of the literary world would trouble the other much with his company. Both authors, of course, are members of the famous Fabian society, and the material difference between them was over matters of policy in connection with that organization. Since the split both have paid their respects to each other in language more forcible than polite.

I never knew such a fellow," wrote Shaw of Wells not long ago, "I could not survive knowing such another."

Wells on his side, has had a go at Shaw in several of his novels. "The New Machiavelli," for instance, he refers to the Irishman as "supposed, in these days, to be sound at bottom"—an observation which cannot have pleased the author of "Candida."

However, we all shall hope that Mr. Shaw will survive a renewal of his acquaintance with Mr. Wells, who can be mighty nasty on very slight provocation, as I know by personal experience. Several years ago the editor of an American magazine wanted an article from Wells and asked me to approach him regarding the matter. Accordingly I wrote asking permission to call on him, but the only way to request me to make myself known to a third person who was, apparently to give me a certificate of respectability, or I could be admitted into the presence.

I never see American journalists," wrote Wells, "unless making sure that they have their smartness under control."

Perhaps Wells had some justification for his action, perhaps he had suffered at the hands of our fraternity. Be that as it may, I failed to submit myself to the inspection of his Cerberus, but wrote to my editorial friend asking to be relieved of his commission.

"Constitutional Factory" to Reconcile Capital and Labor

Berlin, July 12.—German manufacturers will soon be face to face with one of the most important turning points in the history of this country's industrialism. At the next congress of the manufacturers association—an organization including most of the great companies whose efforts have placed Germany in the very forefront of the world's trade—a vote is to be taken upon the question whether or not the constitutional factory shall be adopted or condemned. If it is approved the great factories of Germany will enter upon one of the most momentous and interesting experiments in the annals of business; and if it is condemned there will be a life and death struggle between the supporters of the constitutional factory and its enemies—a struggle involving many millions of the workers of the fatherland as well as most of the big employers of labor.

The constitutional factory is the latest vision of Europe's industrial reformers. It is a vision which was first realized with success by a great mass of industry thirty years ago, and it is now being put forward as the only way of mitigating the growing opposition of capital and labor. It is in particular recommended as an effective way of abolishing strikes; and, therefore, of adding considerably to the productive power of industries and to the earning power of labor.

The notion of the constitutional factory, and the germ itself first came to the brain of Herr Heinrich Freese, when pondering on the way in which political constitutionalism has solved the similar opposition between rulers and the ruled. Herr Freese has the means of putting his theories to the test. He is a wealthy man, the largest manufacturer in Germany of Venetian blinds and of wood pavements, and the employer of many thousand men in his factories at Hamburg, Breslau and Niederschoenhausen.

In this country his industry is a very important one, as practically every German window has Venetian blinds. Herr Freese reasoned that the vice of the present relation between employers and employed is that the employer is still practically an autocrat. Against the autocrat-employer the worker has no resource. Striking or throwing up one's job are unsatisfactory expedients which help the worker no more than the right to emigrate to a free country helps the population of a despotically-ruled state. Real political stability, says Freese, was first attained by a self-limitation of monarchical power. The factory and the workshop must be pacified on this principle. The employer must pledge himself to do certain things and not to do certain other things. But he must go further. By analogy with the constitutional state he must create machinery which will guarantee the keeping of his pledges. A workmen's parliament is necessary in every factory, and it must not be a mere debating society, but must have executive and prohibitory powers in certain matters of moment concerning workers and masters.

State and Factory.

Freese declares that the analogy between the state and the factory must be carried out in all respects. European constitutionalism and not pure democracy is what he aims at. Just as in the state certain branches of government, such as diplomacy and national defense are reserved to the monarch, so in the constitutional factory the employer must retain his authority in several domains. Among these are technical questions, the control of sale and purchase prices, also everything connected with the accountancy. But the general relations of employer to employed, wages, hours of labor, overtime, provisions against accident and fining are matters on which, by analogy with the state no change should be made without consent both of the employees' parliament and of the employer. Freese declares that he makes no attempt to deny the natural conflict of interests between employer and employed. The constitution exists to regulate matters of common interest, and in matters of natural opposition to bring about compromises and to prevent breaches.

Freese "granted" a constitution to his Breslau factory in 1884 by giving the decision on certain matters to a committee partly elected by workers and partly nominated by himself. This succeeded well, and in 1891 imperial legislation helped the idea on. The imperial industrial ordinance of 1891 provided that a workmen's committee must be elected by the majority of employees in every factory employing more than twenty men. The committee must be consulted before any changes are made in the "arbeiterordnung."

The "arbeiterordnung" is a code of regulations concerning hours of work, notice, overwork, calculation and payment of wages and other internal factory concerns, and the law declares that such a code must be displayed in every factory. By giving the workmen a right to be heard as regards the "arbeiterordnung," the state to a certain extent recognised the constitutional factory principle. But the workmen were given only an advisory voice. Freese's proposal is to give them an absolute veto. Together with his "arbeiterordnung" he issued a factory constitution. By this charter he pledged himself not to change any rules without the consent of the employees, it being understood that the workers on their side should not insist on changes without his consent.

To represent the employees, the Freese constitution provided a parliament of eleven elected workmen and four workmen nominees of the employer. Soon afterwards Freese relinquished the right to nominate, and henceforth the workers' parliament consisted of twelve members, all elected.

Like Political Parliament.

Freese's workers' parliament resembles in detail a political parliament. It holds regular sessions to discuss matters concerning conditions of employment, and when special matters arise it convokes extraordinary sessions. The general election is annual and it is preceded by the rendering of a report by the chief officers of the expiring parliament. The sessions are public so that non-members may attend and see what their representatives are doing. Non-members have the right to send in complaints and petitions, but the parliament is free to discuss what it chooses and cannot be terrorized or dictated to by the workmen outside.

Freese has published an account of 200 sessions of his parliament, at all of which he was present as sovereign or minister. The parliament proved a success. Without in any "way injuring the employer's interests it enabled agreements to be reached which materially improved the lot of the employees. It practically did away with the system of fining, a system very common in German industry. It legislated on proposals to work overtime when business was good, and on proposals to shorten hours when business was bad. It came to a compromise with Freese providing for a general reduction of hours, and today the Freese factories have an eight-hour working day. This—except in one class of coal mines—is absolute unknown in German industry. The financial position of the factories did not suffer. The question of wages, and methods of payment of wages repeatedly came up before the parliament, and the opposition between the "monarch" and the "legislators" was usually smoothed down.

System of Profit Sharing.

The constitutional system enabled Freese to enter upon a practicable system of profit sharing. Freese had been in the habit of giving bonuses to his official and clerical staff. He now agreed to extend the bonuses to the men. Five per cent was given to the officials and the same sum to the men. The workmen were here given the usual constitutional (power of the purse," inasmuch as the parliament was allowed to satisfy itself through an auditor that the bonuses were paid on the real profits. Finally Herr Freese made his periodical "speeches from the throne," in which he expounded to his parliament the position of the factory, of business generally and the prospects for the future.

Freese's parliament has unlimited control over all the factory's social and charitable institutions. Under such management the factory's institutions defeated the competition of rival institutions. The substitution of the unpaid parliament for paid officers and agitatory led to an enormous saving in the administration of funds. Before the parliament was founded, workmen paid 25 cents a week for benefits of from 75 cents to $1.50 a week in time of sickness. Under parliamentary control they pay from 6 to 8 cents a week, and in time of sickness draw from $2.50 to $3.75. Similar good results were attained with the death, widows and orphans funds, the savings bank and Christmas funds. The parliament further runs with success the factory baths, sport grounds, and fire brigade, and it organizes the factory's annual festival.

The trouble of the constitutional factory, as experience soon showed, is not in the notion itself, but in the suspicion and dislike which it awakens outside. Herr Freese has had trouble with both the organisations of employers and the organisations of employed. Both are well organized, combative and distrustful. Dr. Sydow, Prussian minister of trade, praised the constitutional factory as one of the most fruitful social initiatives of the present generation; it was further backed up by the Reichstag member, Friedrich Naumann; by the leading economist, Professor Brentano, and by Professor Sering. But reactionaries everywhere have opposed the plan. In the Prussian diet the opposition was led by Dr. Von Roschlinf who characterized industrial constitutionalism as "one of the most dubious and slippery notions which ever entered the brain of man." The fact that the granting of a constitution did not diminish Herr Freese's profits proved no consolation to his frightened fellow employers, and the "Arbeitgeber," the organ of all German manufacturers, began a campaign against Freese's schemes. But Freese has experienced that a greater danger still comes from the side of alleged friends of the working man.

Campaign by Unions.

The trades unions, which are nearly all in the hands of the social democratic party, began a campaign against the constitutional factory. Their campaign was natural enough, because Freese's wish is to spread content, and the socialists admit that they do not want content, even if it is brought by an amelioration of the workers' lot. Freese is assailed as a dishonest man, whose aim is to bribe his men out of their "healthy dissatisfaction." The socialist reichstag member, Heinrich Heines, leads the assault. Socialism, he affirms, does not want a constitutional factory; it wants a democratic factory; a factory which instead of a division of power shall have all power with the workers. The constitutional factory," says Heines, "lets the subjects share power wit hthe king; that jects a big thing; but when we examine it closer, we see that we can do without the king." The socialist assault has had some success. The socialist organizations captured one of Freese's factory parliaments; and from that day compromise was at an end. The parliament declared war on "the socalled reformer" Freese; a strike ensued, and in the end Freese adopted the expedient of refusing employment altogether to members of the social-democratic party. Freese has this month published a new book on factory constitutionalism, in which he declares that his projects "must be carried through not in union with the social-democrats, but in collision with them. The constitutional factory requires as condition of success a 'constitutional frame of mind.'"

ROYAL PERSONAGES DEIFIED BY BRITONS

Most Unmitigated Bunkum Is Swallowed by the General Public.

London, July 12.—Of one thing, anyway, does the public over here never tire, and that is the deification of royal personages. Discovering that what they have been told about the accomplishments of one of them was the most unmitigated bunkum does not discourage them in the least, they are quite as ready to swallow more fiction about another. One is reminded of this queer obsession by a portentous paragraph on "What the King Reads," in a supposedly literary weekly.

"Unlike his father," announces the writer, "King George is a great reader and uses all his spare moments to keep in touch with all that is best in modern literature. Historical works interest him greatly, and it is needless, to say that books on the navy receive special attention. He also likes to read about industrial developments, and he pays some attention to the march of scientific knowledge, though he is no specialist in this direction. He also relishes a good novel, for both their majesties contrive to keep in touch with the best fiction."

Of course all this may be true, but one can't help remembering that King Edward, during his lifetime, likewise was supposed to be a veritable mine of wisdom in any kind of historical and political work at his fingers' ends, whereas Sir Sidney Lee's biography described him as practically a non-reader. One remembers being assured, before the present sovereign mounted the throne, that he was a genius at many things, "an expert carpenter, who can handle a plane and chisel as well as any expert workman." We have his word as worthy of belief as the assertion that the king "uses all his spare moments to keep in touch with all that is best in modern literature." We have his own word for it that the king reads a chapter of the Bible daily, and I have been told on many occasions when he picks up any other book, he likes it to be a good, rousing story or derring-do. His late father was said to enjoy best a thrilling novel, the more highly seasoned the better.

The Keynote of Modern Business Is "Service"

The Genial Dry Goods Salesman Talks of Crops, Prospects, Business and the Coming Convention.

Tennille, Ga., July 11, 1913.—Editor Constitution Firing Line—Dear Sir: In response to your request I am writing you about the condition I have found in the state on my journeys of the past few weeks.

The state of Georgia as a whole, from the wholesaler to the cotton picker, is now looking forward to the marketing of the present cotton crop. The traveling man, however, feels a little hesitancy in bragging of the crop too much, and telling of big future prospects, especially if his business is not in keeping with the crops. However, neither the wholesaler, the retailer nor the salesmen can derive any benefit until the crops are marketed. We have had good seasons in south Georgia, but rain only settles dust and not accounts.

On account of the dry spring we have cotton in all stages, some early and a great quantity of it late, as a good many early planters had to replant.

In covering my territory for the past week, I have been in several large cotton-raising counties. Bulloch, for one, which has always stood in the lead in long staple cotton raising, but this year the majority of the farmers planted short cotton, and they have almost a perfect crop, both of corn and cotton.

The last county I was in was Laurens, another one of the large cotton-raising counties. Looking at the crops in this county I find them excellent in all kinds of production, and the merchants, farmers, bankers, even the cotton-pickers, are all in smiles, and I believe this fall will be pay-day with everybody.

A great many of the merchants are awaiting late to purchase fall stocks, and I expect to see more of them in Atlanta at the convention this fall by 50 per cent than we have ever had before. We will surely show them a good time and also just as good lines of merchandise as they have crops.

Very respectfully,
(Salesman for John Silvey & Co.)

THANKS FOR COURTESY.

South Carolina Paper Boosting for Merchants' Week.

The editor of this department, while visiting Greenville, S. C., recently, took the opportunity to ask the newspapers of that city to run a notice about the coming southern merchants' convention to be held in Atlanta in August. The Greenville Daily Piedmont very courteously carried a notice and gave the convention a strong boost thereby. This opportunity is taken of thanking the paper, as well as Messrs. Koesfer and Booker, the publisher and editor of The Piedmont.

The writer also talked with a number of Greenville merchants and was pleased to hear that the great majority of them are mos t certainly going to be in Atlanta for the convention. A representative merchant said:

"It goes without saying that I will be there, because I never miss my trip to Atlanta twice every year. I find that I can keep in touch with the novelties and buy my staples in Atlanta just as well as anywhere, and I always enjoy myself on a visit to your city. But this year there are at least two dozen merchants from here who will come with me, and we are going to form a boosting party for Greenville first, of course, but after that for the south and the south's metropolis—Atlanta."

W. B. Carlton, of the Capital City Tobacco company, is responsible for a lot. He saw the ball game last Thursday, and the Crackers lost the first game they have dropped—nine starts.

SOME WORKERS

FOR THE

ATLANTA---TWO WEEKS---AUGUST 4-16

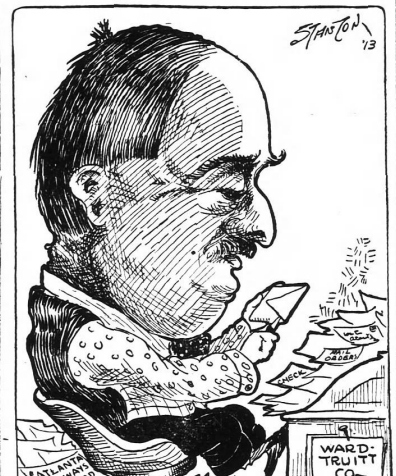
No. 5. W. A. Ward



When W. A. Ward was approached for his views on the approaching southern merchants' convention he was found busy opening his morning mail. As he opened letter after letter a pleased smile gradually spread over his features and finally he looked up with that genial expression for which he is famous and said:

"Did you know that some people are talking of hard times and poor collections? Well, of the five letters I have so far opened, four of them contained checks. That doesn't sound so bad, does it?"

We were forced to admit that it did comprise a high batting average and a look of jealousy must have crept into our eyes as we thought of the mail we had ourselves opened that very morning, for Mr. Ward continued:

"Of course, it doesn't happen that way with every five I open, but it is true that our collections are much better than we had anticipated for this time of the year. Our business is also holding up well. But on the other hand, we find many merchants who are putting off their buying this year as far as possible. Personally I am not sorry that they are, because I am feeling exceedingly optimistic about the prospects for the fall, and a little conservatism now will probably be for the best in the long run.

"About the convention? Why, certainly we will have 1,000 merchants here. I shall be surprised if we don't go considerably over that number. From all parts of the country we receive word daily of merchants who are coming here. Crop prospects are fine and the grain is already a big success. Cotton is doing well and we have had some ideal cotton weather of late. If it only keeps up for a few weeks longer, we are going to see a year of plenty which will go a long way to overcome the two rather lean years we have suffered from in this states.

"Also I think we have arranged one of the best programs for a business convention I ever saw. It will be like attending the finest business college in the country, because the speakers will be practical business men who are confronted with the conditions we wish to discuss. Then there will be the various entertainments at the ball park, the theaters, the barbecues, luncheons and receptions, which will make it a dandy fine holiday for anyone, even aside from the beneficial aspect."

"Yes, you can say for me that I am well pleased with the work being done and am confident of the best convention Atlanta has ever had."

THE TWO BILLS RUN HOT RACE FOR BILLS

The two popular city salesmen with Fain & Stamps, Bill Quarles and Bill Gaston, are getting into warmer and warmer rivalry every day. The race for supremacy is now a scorcher, and it cannot be discovered who is ahead for July at present, the race is so close. The way these two salesmen go after the big bills is a terror, and as one of the office force remarked, "If Bill got after a big bill, Bill would surely hunt bills all night."

Gideons' Meeting.

The Atlanta camp of Gideons extend a cordial invitation to all traveling men, their families and friends to meet with them in the convention hall of the Piedmont hotel at 3 p. m. today. A specially attractive program has been arranged for the meeting and everyone who comes is sure to go away with something of benefit to himself.

J. S. Cheek and R. W. Webb are in this week with the Ridley-Williamson-Wyatt company. They report business as good although a number of merchants are holding off their buying until they come to Atlanta in August for the convention.

GOOD NEWS ABOUT CONVENTION 'CUE

Jim Little Will Once More Exercise His Famous Art at Barbecue in August. R. K. Rambo, Assistant.

The Merchants and Manufacturers' association sent out one of the best bits of news in reference to the forthcoming Southern Merchants' convention when they announced that James B. Little (better known as "Jim Little") would have charge of the barbecue again. The fame of Jim Little as a barbecue artist is state-wide and it is said that he approaches the task with the reverence that the true artist always feels for a chance to effect a masterpiece in his own particular line.

As assistant Mr. Little will have R. K. Rambo, the well-known sales manager for John Silvey & Co. When these two dry goods men get together there ought to be something doing. (Everyone knows that Mr. Little is president of the Dougherty-Little-Redwine company.) Of course if things don't move they will surely rip.

Anyway the 'cue is sure to be a record-breaker and the only advice which can conscientiously be given is this, "When you hear that Jim Little is at the helm in a barbecue affair—come. Never mind such little things as sickness, distance, storm and pestilence—but just come."

In the Manager's Office

"And After the Last Letter Was Signed They Talked Together of Many Things."

A couple of the boys from the road were sitting in the manager's office the other Saturday morning when the conversation turned to automobiles. Jim remarked;

"To my mind the automobile is one of the biggest curses to business that was ever invented."

"How come? Let's hear the reasons for that sweeping condemnation."

"Let me give you an example. Last week I had two men to see in town here. It was Thursday afternoon. One lives out at East Lake and I went out there to see him. Did I see him? No. Why? Mr. Man had gone to the ball game in his automobile. So I started for my second call, which was in Decatur. Customer No. 2 was another automobile enthusiast, and he had gone out to the river to do some fishing. I think, or for a-in out toward Roswell perhaps. Anyway, I couldn't see him either, and my entire afternoon was spoilt on account of two men who would have been attending to their business as well as allowing me to attend to mine, if they had only had as much interest in their businesses as they had in their automobiles."

"It is a fact that for about three months out of the year my business is badly broken into on account of the automobiles my customers own. It is worst in the small towns, and the trouble comes from various points. I know men who have business with about six or seven thousand capital behind them who have two or three thousand of it tied up in a car. And when you go to see them you find them out having a good time in the car. Things weren't run that way when daddy was in business, and I believe there wouldn't be as many business failures today if the owners and managers of businesses didn't do so much gallivanting around in automobiles.

The oldest traveler had been an interested listener to the foregoing conversation, and just here he broke in:

"The bad part of your argument is that it sounds good while it is really full of holes. In the first place the kind of man who uses an automobile to the detriment of his business today would have attended all the barn raisings, hog killings and dances in the countryside in his horse and buggy in your father's day, and his business would have gone to rack and ruin just the same. It isn't the surroundings which make a man a good reliable business man or the reverse, it is the man himself. If your father was alive today he would probably own an automobile and use it for the benefit of his business, as wise men do now, and he would have been thankful for the new business which the automobile industry has brought to the country. For the good roads it has compelled and the thousands of other improvements which have come in its wake. The trouble with your viewpoint is that it is narrow. You shouldn't grumble because conditions have changed, but act the part of a man and adapt yourself to the advancement of the world and keep step with the procession. Think it over."

"Get busy," we said to the Committees. "Make this the best one we've ever put over."

And the committees did that same. That is to say, they are now doing it. They are a bright and industrious set of lads, too, and they're the kind who get what they go after.

They're fixing up an assortment of Staples and Fancies that will do your heart good. They're going to put the prize in surprise all the way through this Convention.

And we're beginning to hear from the comers. Don't wait. Let us hear you're going to be with us. It will do us good to know that you expect to be among those present. Drop a line to Secretary Harry T. Moore.

If you haven't already made up your mind to attend, do it now and go to work on your plans. We want you without fail.

To Look and Feel Bright in Hot Weather

(From The Woman Beautiful.)

This is the season when she who would have a rose-leaf complexion, lily-white neck and hands, should turn her thoughts to mercolized wax, the firm friend of the summer girl. Nothing so effectually overcomes the soiling effects of sun, wind, dust and dirt. The wax literally absorbs the scorched, discolored, withered or coarsened cuticle, bringing forth a brand new skin, clear, soft and girlishly beautiful. It also unclogs the pores, removing blackheads and increasing the skin's breathing capacity. An ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, applied nightly like cold cream, and washed off mornings, will gradually improve the worst complexion.

When depressed by the heat and you want to freshen up for the evening, bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. You'll find this more refreshing than an hour's rest. It is fine for smoothing out wrinkles, even the deeper ones.—(adv.)

Salubrious climate, beautiful environment, strong and exacting courses of study, pleasant recreation make life at Cox College a joy and a never ending source of mental development and vigor.

Several car loads of material for the marble steps have been received and two flights have already been completed. The dormitory building is being renovated from bottom to top. New as well as former students will appreciate these improvements.

A certificate or diploma from this institution is valuable, since Cox College has stood for seventy years in the front rank of colleges for women. Today its equipment is modern, its faculty strong, its courses of study with its high standards of work are well adapted to the modern requirements of the education of young women.—(adv.)

BILLIKENS PASS GULLS IN PENNANT RACE

Carl Thompson in Great Form; Allows Four Hits, Fans Seven; Some Great Catches in Field

By Dick Jemison.

Carl Thompson, the former University of Georgia star, twirled the best game of ball that has been twirled by an Atlanta twirler at Ponce de Leon park this season, when he smeared the Gulls with whitewash Saturday, afternoon—2 to 0.

Carl had everything—speed, control and sharp curves. He worked coolly, carefully and like a Trojan, from start to finish. Only four widely scattered hits did he allow the hard-hitting Gulls, while he made seven of them fan the breeze, and did not issue a free ticket during the entire nine innings.

The former collegian received excellent support from his teammates, the two bobbles that were registered failing to do any damage. It was just the opposite of the two preceding games. When the pinch came Saturday, the team supported Thompson fine. The bobbles were made when they did not affect the scoring at all.

Pug Cavet twirled for the Gulls, asking permission to go back at the Crackers. He pitched an even better game than he did Thursday, but he had stiffer opposition this time. Thursday's game was just donated to him. He had no business winning it. But he had a chance Saturday, but Thompson killed that.

Great Catches.

Carl also helped himself with a catch of a line drive in the seventh inning that prevented the runs from crossing the plate. With two on, Gene Paulet smacked one right back at Carl, which he nickled without any thought of bodily injury. Had it got ten away, two runs would have tallied, and the old ball game would have been tied.

Harry Daller was given a much needed rest this Monday, with the hope that a few days on the bench will get that great batting lamp back again. Frank Womack played left Saturday, and acquitted himself splendidly.

In the fifth he made a show-stirring catch of Charley Schmidt's line drive back of short that was a peach, and in the eighth he pulled one down over his head from the bat of Cavet after a hard run.

Stock played his usual grand game for the Gulls at the shortfield, and although no one can lead to the back of his stops and throws after that robbed the Crackers of many a safe hit.

His We Second.

Long opened the first inning for the Crackers by hitting to Stock, who pulled Robertson off the bag with his throw, and Tommy was safe. Welchonce sent him to second with a smash over third. Alpermann sacrificed them both up a base, and Walter Smith walked, filling the sacks. Cavet uncorked a wild pitch, scoring Long, then clinched up and fanned Bisland and Archer.

Thompson Kept getting better and in the fourth inning he fanned Stock, McGill and Robertson in succession, retiring the side on strikes. As he had fanned Cavet at the end of the previous inning, this gave him four in a row.

The second Cracker run came in the sixth inning. Alpermann led off with a two-ply smash to left, but was forced at third on Smith's bunt. Bisland got a single to right field and scored Smith with a Texas leaguer back of third.

Stock made a wonderful play on this, backing up O'Dell and getting the ball near the edge of the outfield on the left field foul line. He threw to the plate and only Smith's dive for the base kept him from being touched.

Saturday's victory gave the Crackers four out of six for the week and a run-out of ten with two ties for the home stay.

Pitched Phenomenal Ball Against Gulls

CARL THOMPSON,

The former University of Georgia pitcher, who, since becoming a Cracker, has won two games, as many in two starts as he won the entire time while with Birmingham. Both of Thompson's games have been four-hit affairs. But Saturday he outdid his former performance. Carl pitched one of the greatest games of his career, the hard-hitting Gulls being helpless before him. The Crackers are with Carl Thompson. They are pulling strong for the former Red and Black star, and they intend to give him their best every time he pitches. When the season ends, even with the big handicap of eleven defeats as a Baron, Carl is going to be right up among the pitchers above the .500 mark. Carl pitched the Gulls out of first place.

BILLIKENS

Peppery Johnny Dobbs Leads His Fast Team Against the Crackers

Locals' Home Stay Will Be Brought to a Close With These Games—Back Home Last of Month.

Johnny Dobbs and his Montgomery Billikens will be the opponents of the local club at Ponce de Leon park, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. A double-header may be played on Tuesday. One of these games is the 2 to 2 tie of the last trip.

This series will have a direct bearing on the first division berths of four clubs. Victories in the majority of the games for the Crackers will tighten the race up considerably more than it stands at the present writing, and it is some tight as it is.

On their last visit to Muncey, the Billikens won two games, lost one and tied one. The Crackers are going to endeavor to reverse this count this trip. On the season the Billikens have the edge on the locals with six games won to our four.

Dobbs has had his team traveling at a great clip for the past month, despite the efforts of a meddling president to tear it to pieces by engineering a deal that the head of the league made go through.

On Road Thursday.

Immediately after the games with the Billikens the Crackers start on another hike around the circuit.

The first stop will be made in New Orleans, where five games will be played, four games being scheduled, the fifth being a postponed battle of the last trip. The Crackers ought to fare well on this visit.

Memphis will be the next stop, games being scheduled for Red Elm, July 21, 23, 23.

Montgomery will be visited next, with contests there on July 24, 25 and 26.

The road trip will be brought to a close with games in Mobile on July 27, 28, 29.

Fifteen games in all will be played on this trip, and at the rate the Crackers are traveling they ought to get at least the odd dozen of the lot. If they travel as well as they did on the last trip, they will get several more than just the odd contest. It will also be the last visit of the Crackers to the four cities named.

The Rest of the Season.

Returning home July 31 the team will play the Nashville Volunteers at Ponce de Leon on July 31, August 1 and 2. This ought to be profitable.

Right after this one home series of three games, the Crackers play their last games away from home, visiting Chattanooga, Nashville and Birmingham in that order, then returning home.

Chattanooga will be played August 4, 5, 6 Nashville August 7, 8, 9, 10, and Birmingham August 11, 12, 13.

It is likely that some decision will be reached on the proposed trade between the Crackers and the Vols before the Crackers go to Sulphur Dell for this August stand. If Kavanaugh orders the deal played over, which he will most likely do, there will be a double-header on one of the dates mentioned.

The August 13 date will be the last road game of the season. Not counting tied games with New Orleans and Nashville, a postponed affair with Chattanooga and anywhere that may develop in the meantime, the Crackers have twenty-three straight games on the home lot up until the close of the season September 2.

Chattanooga, Birmingham, Montgomery, Memphis, New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga will visit the Crackers' stronghold in that order in the last month of play.

With the team going at a good clip, new strength being added and the pennant bee buzzing in the bonnets of the local players, this home stay ought to be a very profitable one.

WELCHONCE CLOSE TO LEAGUE LEAD

Has Climbed to Within One Point of Dave Robertson. Elberfeld Tops Both in Fewer Games.

Harry Welchonce is right after the batting lead of the Southern league. The local centerfielder is now only 1 point behind Dave Robertson, who has been slumping with frightful regularity.

In the last five games, in twenty-two times up, Robertson has only been able to connect safely twice, bringing his average down from over .350 in a hurry.

Welchonce has been pursuing the even tenor of his way, so to speak, getting his one, two or three hits a game and climbing slowly, but surely, after the leaders.

Kid Elberfeld is the real leader, but the Kid has participated in only 60 games, while Welchonce, with 85, and Robertson, with 92 games, have a prior claim.

Here is the way the three men are hitting up to and including the games played Saturday:

Players.	G.	AB.	H.	P.C.
Elberfeld	60	204	70	.343
Robertson	92	322	108	.335
Welchonce	85	247	116	.321

"FORT M'PHERSON DAY" AT LOCAL PARK TUESDAY

Tuesday will be a big day at the local ball yard. It will be the usual ladies' day, but it has also been designated as Fort McPherson day.

The entire Seventeenth infantry, officers and enlisted men, and their band will attend the game on this day and root for the home club. The entire smoker section has been reserved for the regiment, 1,000 strong.

It is appropriate that a day should be set aside for Uncle Sam's warriors, and doubly so inasmuch as the local team will be battling with Montgomery for a position at the top of the ladder.

The soldier boys and their lusty lungs are sure to aid in the noise-making on this afternoon and their famous band will give a musical treat that one cannot hear outside of concert tours.

A ball game and a fine band concert all for one price of admission. Conzelman and Elmer Brown, for a battle royal on this date.

JACKSON AHEAD IN BAN'S LEAGUE

Cobb and Speaker Second and Third—Collins Best Run Getter—Jackson Makes the Most Hits.

Joe Jackson continues to lead the batters of the American league with Ty Cobb in second place and Tris Speaker third.

Jackson has made the most number of hits and he and Speaker are the only players in Ban Johnson's league who have registered more than 100 bingles.

Here are the players who are batting .270 or better and who have participated in 15 or more games up to and including the games played Wednesday, July 9:

Collins and Baker Show Speed In Starting of Double Plays

Fans are not in the habit of ruining their eyesight in studying the fielding records of the major league players, and there are few members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America who build up feature stories regarding the defensive work of the pastimers.

Eddie Collins, guardian for the White Elephants of the middle cushion, is acknowledged by all experts to be the Keystone king of the American league, but when any authority sets out to prove that the Columbia graduate is the peer of his contemporaries he never rushes to the guide books for statistical information on the subject.

Collins at Keystone.

A good way to find out how swift a fielder is, some persons think, is to take the number of double plays a man starts. Up to July 1 the American leaguers had rid their systems of 350 dual killings, the man who started most of them being Collins. He took the initiative in sixteen of his team's two-ply massacres.

The Johnsonites' swiftest shortstop, according to the performances in the Double Play league, is Ray Chapman, of the Naps. He inaugurated eight plays that resulted in the retirement of a pair of runners. In figuring Chapman's speed as an inaugurator of double plays, it should be remembered that he has been often absent from the Naps' line-up because of injuries, and it is possible that had he played all season long, as has Collins, he would now have started just as many two-ply killings.

The third basemen who have started the greatest number of double plays are Frank Baker, of the White Elephants, and Ivan Olson, of the Naps. Each man has inaugurated six. George Stovall, of the Browns, shows the way to the first-sackers, having been the pioneer in seven dual massacres.

In the battery department there is a tie for the honors. Catchers Schalk, of the White Sox, and Agnew, of the Brown Hose, each having started four. So have pitchers Eddie Cicotte, of Chicago, and Walter Johnson, of Washington.

Tris Speaker, of Boston, who won the Chalmers American league trophy in 1912, and Ty Cobb, of Detroit, who secured the car the two previous seasons, are generally considered the two smartest outfielders in the Junior league, but thus far this season neither man has made nearly the number of double plays that Bert Shotten, of the Browns, has to his credit.

Shotten in Field.

Shotten has taken the initiative in eight two-ply killings, which would indicate that he has been making just as many sensational catches as the high-priced fly chasers of the Detroit and Boston clubs. Bert started two double plays in the game of June 10, Duffy Lewis, left fielder of the Red Sox, having earlier in the campaign done the same thing. J. Gladstone Graney, of the Naps, is the lone American league outfielder to pull off an unassisted double play, he having accomplished this feat on June 1.

The Browns just at present are leading in manufacturing double plays, with the Washingtons a close second, and World's Champion Red Sox last. These figures show the number of double plays started by the infielders, outfielders and battery men of each team, and also reveal the men who lead by positions:

"BIG THREE" BOOST MARKS SATURDAY

"The Big Three" Jackson, Cobb and Speaker had good days with the willow Saturday, and all boosted their batting averages a little for the season.

Jackson gained 6 points when he got three hits in three times up. Cobb went up 2 points when he got two hits in three tries. Speaker gained 2 points with four hits in nine tries.

GREGORY WILL TAKE RAY BOYD'S PLACE

Injured Hurler Is Released. New Twirler Is From the Central Association.

Ray Boyd, the Japan hurler, whose bad arm has kept him out of the fray practically all season, will be released in the next day or so.

Pitcher Gregory has been purchased from the Ottumwa club, of the Central association. Last season this lad won 23 games and lost 12. This season he has won 15 and lost 5.

TRAVERS IN FRONT.

Open Golf Champion Still Winning First Honors.

Newburgh, N. Y., July 12.—J. D. Travers, national golf champion, won the invitation tournament and the first prize on the Powelton club links this afternoon, beating G. P. Tiffany, of Powelton, 5 up and 5 to play. Travers went on and finished the 36 holes in 145. This is the record of the course.

Cross v. Baldwin.

National Amateur Motorcycle Championships at Denver

The national amateur motorcycle championships of the United States will be run at Denver, Colo., July 25-26. The Rosch Magneto Co., of New York, has for the third consecutive year donated a magnificent silver trophy, which is known as the Rosch trophy, and will be presented to the rider who accomplishes the most consistent performance in the annual championship races run during the meet.

The presenting of this trophy each year has brought about a new title in the national federation rules, so that the winner this year will be officially recognized throughout the country as the amateur champion of America, and will be in a position to defend his title against all comers, if necessary.

The awarding of the Rosch trophy, which is even larger and more valuable than those given in years gone by, is to be determined by a point system as follows:

Points.

The winner of the 5-mile championship to receive 5 points, the second to receive 2 points, and the third to receive 1 point.

The winner of the 10-mile championship to receive 8 points, the second to receive 4 points, and the third to receive 2 points.

The winner of the 25-mile championship to receive 12 points, the second to receive 6 points, and the third to receive 3 points.

The winner of the 50-mile championship to receive 15 points, the second to receive 10 points, and the third to receive 5 points.

In All Events.

It will be necessary for the winner to defend any title to compete in all events, the point system thus allowing the rider who may receive only third place in the 5-mile race to have a chance to win the trophy by collecting his position in the races to follow. The motorcyclists of the country are thoroughly interested in these national contests and are expected that the interest at the Eleventh National Meet will be sustained throughout the five racing days, as the winner of the trophy will not be known until the last championship race is run.

President of the F. A. M., Dr. B. J. Patterson, and Dr. F. P. Thornley, chairman of the competition committee, have accepted the trophy for the Federation of American Motorcyclists.

MONIHAN JOINS COLE COMPANY AS DIRECTOR OF SALES

John Gay Monihan, who has joined the Cole Motor Car company, of Indianapolis, is one of the best-known men in the automobile industry. Aggressive, but conservative, he will have done much toward the progression that has marked the advance of success in the automobile industry as father of the idea for the amateur driver open-to-open tour, he gained international prominence.

Although only with Cole for one week, his assistance on the standardized car proposanda which will be announced to the public in a fortnight has been valuable.

NEW AEROPLANE

Has "Inherent Stability," Says Designer Lake.

New York, July 12.—Christopher J. Lake, one of the inventors of the even keel submarine boat used in the United States navy, has reported to the Aero Club of America that he and his son, Simon Lake, have evolved a type of aeroplane with "inherent stability." He declared that he had tested the new flyer at an altitude of 60 feet, and found that when it was brought in an inverted position it easily recovered its balance and made a safe and easy descent.

The machine has such great longitudinal stability that the weight of a man moving about the plane would upset the machine only to a small degree, he said. "I believe the day will come when men can walk about with absolute safety while flying in aeroplanes."

GEORGES BOILLOT WINS GRAND PRIX

Longueau, France, July 12.—Georges Boillot winner of the grand prize at Dieppe in 1912, today won the grand prize of the Automobile club of France over the Picardy circuit of approximately 570 miles in 7 hours 53 minutes 56 4-5 seconds.

Jules Goux, the Frenchman who won the recent 500-mile race at Indianapolis, was second, in 7 hours 56 minutes 22 seconds.

The race, apart from the speed attained, had as a principal condition a rule that machines must not consume more than 4 gallons of fuel for each 100 kilometers, or about 62 1-2 miles.

No Americans were entered.

WEATHER HALTS RACE.

Flying Boats Will Not Resume Race Until Monday.

Muskegon, Mich., July 12.—High winds, rough seas and accidents to machinery suspended for today the Chicago to Detroit flying boat cruise. Tonight the only three flyers who remain in the contest were at the same point where they spent last night.

Roy Francis and Beckwith Havens spent all day at Pentwater. Glenn L. Martin was at Lake Harbor, where he impatiently waited for the wind to abate and thus enable him to overtake Francis and Havens. The latter were not only handicapped by the gale, but their machines had been disabled by the high waves rolling in on Lake Michigan beach, where the machines were drawn up last night. Had the wind abated it would probably have been easy for Martin to overtake them, inasmuch as he said that his craft was in "tip-top flying shape."

Francis and Havens had neglected to draw their boats far enough out of the water last night and when the heavy seas rolled in the steering gear of each machine was damaged. It was necessary today to await the arrival of new parts from Grand Rapids before the boats could be put in flying condition. There was no prospect tonight of a resumption of the flying until the wind abates.

Exhibition Mill.

Kid Duke, the local bantam, boxed a five-round, no decision contest with Kid Brooks at the American theater Friday night. No decision was given, but there are many who thought that Duke had the better of the scrap. Duke wants to get a bout in the near future with either Spider Brit or Mayer Price.

CHECKER TOURNAMENT FOR SOUTH'S TITLE

The checker tournament for the championship of the southern states will be contested in Atlanta this year. Taft hall has been engaged for the big event, and the dates, August 5 and 6, set.

All of the prominent players of the southern states will attend, including Fishburne, the South Carolina marvel, who held the championship several years, and who plays many of his matches blindfolded against several opponents at one time.

There will be about thirty entrants in all. Players from all over the country are invited to participate. Tickets will be on sale at all the fire engine houses. The admission fee will be 25 cents. Tickets good for both days.

Driscoll, Hall, Netherland, Bishop and Newman are a few of the local cracks who will participate.

MANAGER SMITH AFTER TWIRLER

Expects to Land One in the Next Day or Two—May Be a Left-Hander—Won't Tell Who.

Manager Billy Smith announced last night that he was after a twirler to strengthen the local twirling staff and he expected to have something definite to announce before the team leaves on its road jaunt Wednesday night.

Although Manager Smith stated that it might be a left-hander that he would sign, he would not state who the man was. He is after a corking good hurler, and he does not want to tip his hand until the trade is closed.

Then, too, it is possible that Boy Smith may be landed, in the claim that the Crackers have against the White Sox, though this is only a remote chance.

EBBETS PROTESTS

Victory of Cincinnati Reds in Thursday's Game.

Brooklyn, N. Y., July 12.—President Ebbets, of the Brooklyn club, today formally protested yesterday's game with Cincinnati. He based his protest on the ground that Umpire Quigley violated rules when he ordered Moran back to second base after that player had advanced from first to third on a wild pitch in the first inning. Ebbets claims the decision cost Brooklyn one or more runs.

DETECTIVE HARRY SCOTT'S HUNCH—THRILLING STORY OF HOW IT SECURED JAMES CONLEY'S CONFESSION

By Britt Craig.

Have you ever had a hunch that there wasn't anybody around the table that held a higher hand than your Jacks over tens and consequently you shoved a 'blue' to the mahogany with the result that every hostile hand went to the discard?

Have you ever had a hunch that it was going to rain and you pulled in the rugs and took the clothes off the line and let down the windows just in time to see the elements express themselves in a downpour?

Have you ever had a hunch of any kind—one of those real, undeniable inner promptings that chases round and round in your bonnet and worries the life out of you and invariably forces you to do something that you really intended doing but about which you were sorely undecided?

If you're human you have.

Detective Harry Scott had one about Jim Conley, the negro sweeper in the Phagan mystery. It was one of those irresistible hunches that buzzes about like a June bug. He took it for its word with the result that he found the key that is predicted to unlock the secret of Atlanta's most hideous murder.

Detectives are very normal beings. They have hunches like the weakest of us. They're superstitious, too. You can't find a single one that will walk under a ladder or fail to knock wood when he brags about himself.

A hunch is one of the most common of human afflictions. It is the very essence of a frailty that affects every normal somebody. The very fact that it is a weakness requires a nerve of steel and backbone of similar fortitude to play one to the limit like Detective Scott played his.

Good detectives, like genius, are utterly human. Genius frequently stalks about in its shirt sleeves without a shave and wearing suspenders. It has been known to chew tobacco and cuss volubly. Sometimes, it has a red nose and a thirst. It can sleep as contentedly on Decatur street as on Peachtree.

Detectives Very Human.

A good detective is so absolutely human that he generally chews tobacco, doesn't care where he spits it, possesses a vocabulary of profanity that is surpassed only by its eloquence and brightens up sartorially only when he falls in love or his wife makes him.

Detective Scott, although he doesn't chew tobacco—not since he was 16, at least—or allow his profanity to interfere with his knowledge of perfectly good English, is so keenly human that he had a premonition that Jim Conley knew something or other about the death of Mary Phagan.

While the investigation was at its zenith, the negro lay in police headquarters, neglected and sorely in need of a bath. Scott, casting about for someone on whom to cast suspicion in order to convince himself that he wasn't prejudiced against the white prisoner, was guided by the hunch to Conley.

He had no reason to suspect the sweeper other than the fact that Jim had been caught washing his shirt in order to appear presentable at the inquest. Nothing but the hunch pointed Conleywards.

He tried to figure that the negro was guilty and there was nothing to figure on. He tried to figure he was innocent, and the hunch figured for him. It pointed to Conley like that irresistibly which uneasy feeling draws you over on the right hand side of the street on the way home of a dark night when the left side is really the nearest.

It weighed as heavily as remembered wrong. It tortured him of nights and made his days miserable. Conley knows something, it whispered. Pick it out of him or go back to selling fish.

Finally, the Pinkerton man set out with Detective John Black, of police headquarters, to prove that either the hunch was a liar or he wasn't a detective as good as he had always considered. Conley had maintained that he was illiterate—couldn't even write his name, and as this seemed the only vulnerable spot in his story, Scott told him he probably was a liar.

At least, it was the only thing about the negro that could plausibly be discredited. On the theory that every negro who owns a wife and home as Conley owned, possesses furniture bought on the installment plan, the two sleuths cast about for some contract to which the black man could possibly have attached his signature.

They visited third-rate furniture stores, business houses and jewelry shops. The search was fruitless. The signature of Conley was as missing as the secret of the sphinx. Scott was prepared to abandon his hunch on the doorsteps of failure when Fate—not a thirst—took them to the vicinity of a saloon near Five Points.

Providence—an I not the bouncer—urged a gentleman in Panama and white shoes, and with the oily air of a collector, gently through the doorway. He stepped to the sidewalk and recognized Black. He greeted and shook a disconsolate hand.

Wanted to See Conley.

"What nigger?" said Black, promoting conversation.

"That Conley nigger!"

Something bright and dazzling flashed through Scott's hunch-ridden brain as he noticed the batch of bills carefully folded in the person's coat pocket.

The hunch told him to collar the oily individual and search his batch of bills. He did, at the oily one's consent. A single glance revealed a contract issued to Jim Conley. A second glance revealed the negro's name, scrawled in a characteristic hand all over the signee's line.

Scott's hunch had been fulfilled. It had guided him to a specimen of the black sweeper's handwriting—two words in barely legible script that proved the negro a liar three ways from breakfast. It has since proved the means of lifting the Phagan secret from the mire of mystery.

Detective Harry Scott (in Panama hat), of the Pinkertons, who played the hunch that Jim Conley, the negro, knew something of the girl's murder. The accompanying figure is Detective John Black, of police headquarters, whose work in co-operation with the Pinkerton man did much to solve the crime. Great dependence will be put in their testimony at the coming trial of Leo Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan.

The contract was signed by Conley more than twelve months ago for a watch he had bought from a jewelry firm. It is now in possession of the solicitor general, and likely will be produced as evidence in the coming trial of Leo Frank.

The Third Degree.

What followed its discovery was the most successful third degree ever operated at police headquarters. Scott and Black showed the signature to the solicitor general, detective chief and Chief Beavers.

Then, they showed it to Conley.

It was on a Sunday afternoon. Police station was dull and drowsy and a sleepy atmosphere pervaded the building. Even the inevitable newspaper reporter was absent. Scott and Black took the prisoner into the little 6x8 "sweat box" and sat him where the light could play full on his face.

Scott locked the door and threw the key over the transom. Black pulled off his coat, let down his suspenders and put cigarettes conveniently near. Conley blinked at the light and wondered what was coming off.

Scott pulled a mysterious something from his pocket and laid it on the table. It was a folded bit of paper, and he smiled significantly as it left his hand. Conley grimaced and shifted a leg.

"Well, Jim, we've got the deadwood on you. Better cough up and tell us something."

"Honest, white folks, I swear 'fore God and High heaven I don't know a thing." His plea was pathetic in its apparent sincerity.

"But we know better. The quicker you tell, the better off you'll be. Kick in, Jim—kick in. It's the best for you."

Scott stepped to the table and pointed at the folded slip.

"You see that. It's enough to hang you. You don't know what it is, and you couldn't guess in a year. It's dead-wood, nigger. It's dead-wood. You'd better kick through or we'll pull it on you."

The negro studied the slip intently. He was sorely puzzled. Great drops of sweat rolled down his face and his fingers twitched nervously. His very air betrayed guilt.

"Listen," said Scott. "Can you write?"

"Naw, sir, I can't. I never could."

"Will you swear it?"

"I shore will."

"Do you know the penalty for perjury?"

"Twenty years in the gang—maybe more."

"What's perjury?"

"How could you sign this if you couldn't write?"

Conley was wordless for minutes. He stared dumbly out the window and twisted his fingers. Suddenly, he exclaimed:

"White folks, I'm a liar!"

"Good! We thought so all the time. Now, we want you to write a bit."

"Now, write the alphabet."

He wrote the A, B, C's in huge, scrawling figures.

"Write this: 'That long, tall, black negro did this by hisself.'"

Conley winced slightly as he evidently recalled the words of the tragic note found beside the body.

He wrote, slowly and deliberately with apparently no effort to disguise his script:

"That long, tall, black negro did this boy hisslef."

The detectives, peering eagerly over the negro's shoulder, noted with satisfaction the misspelling of words "by" and "self." They ordered him to rewrite the words.

"Boy" and "slef," he wrote.

The original murder missive had been written "boy" and "slef." Satisfied that Conley was their author, the detectives flatly accused him of writing the Phagan notes.

"I didn't do it," he answered. "'Fore God I didn't."

Showed He Was Guilty.

"The very fact that you errored in these words show you're guilty. The handwriting compares with the originals. You accuse yourself of killing the girl. I believe you did it. Everybody else will believe it. You'll be hung just as sure as you're foot high and black."

"But I ain't guilty. I don't know a thing about them notes or about that killing—honest, white folks. Can't you believe a word I say?"

"Naw, him, we wouldn't b'lieve you on the gallows. You tell so many lies."

Black broke in.

"Listen, Jim, you don't want to go to the scaffold. It's hell to be slung at the end of a rope to God knows where. You're going, though, just as sure's hell's hot, and still heatin'. There ain't but one way out of it—some day I'm going to be the same to you—whenever I get the chance."

Black carried the news to Scott. Scott went directly to Conley's cell and drew a masterful picture of a You're got yourself in a pickle, and there ain't but one way out—kick in. Tell all about it."

"I don't know a thing, boss, I swear I don't. If I did, I'd tell you the truth—the whole truth, so he'p me God!"

Black's tone had been so convincing that the negro had been left in a quandary. The detectives comprehended it.

Scott said:

"We'll give you a day to think it over."

With which, they transferred the prisoner to a dark and desolate cell in the prison downstairs, locked him in and left him alone to his thoughts and a vivid outlook of the scaffold.

While the detectives jubilee inwardly and kept reporters from gaining knowledge of the marvelous development, they quizzed Conley for seven following days trying to exact a confession. It was locked firm in his bosom. He stoutly maintained the original story.

It was the following Saturday—the day that veteran reporters declare was the newsiest in Atlanta's history. Beside the famous Felder-Lanford dictagraph row, Frank was indicted, developments came thick and fast from many quarters, and other things were happening that kept an army of news-gatherers the busiest of their careers.

At daybreak, Detective Black was summoned by Conley to the negro's cell.

"I've got something to tell you, boss," he said. Black locked himself in with the prisoner and Conley began to unburden himself of his first tale of complicity in the Phagan crime.

"I wrote those notes," he admitted. "Mr. Frank had me write 'em. I didn't know what he wanted with them, and he gave me some money to do it. I'd a told you sooner, but I thought he'd send me more money for not tellin'. I hoped some of his friends 'd get me out."

Dorsey Is Notified.

The solicitor was notified immediately. The grand jury was being presented with evidence against the suspected Frank. Conley's confession was submitted in the meanwhile. Thirty minutes later the famous bill of indictment was drawn.

Although he had eked a wonderful yarn from the negro, Scott's hunch failed to subside. It buzzed about in his head like a circular saw and got frantic at times. It told him the negro knew even more than he had confessed.

The time, by this time, considered the hunch productive and trustworthy. He set out on new lines. He faced the negro with a daily accusation of guilt and a picture of his predicted doom. It had a satisfactory effect. Conley grew weak and lost his appetite. He slept little and a nervous and haunted look crept into his eyes.

While the Pinkerton man assumed an attitude of hostility toward the black sweeper, Detective Black affected sympathy, as per plot, and bought the prisoner drinks and pies and sandwiches and consolation. Between the two fires, Jim inclined toward the headquarters man and gradually the crust of his reticence began to crack.

"Mister Black," he said one day, "you've been mighty good to me, and some day I'm going to be the same to you—whenever I get the chance."

Black carried the news to Scott. Scott went directly to Conley's cell and drew a masterful picture of a hanging at daybreak. He declared that efforts already were being made to indict him for the actual murder, and told that officials of the pencil factory had openly accused the negro of the crime.

Scott's visit and attitude left the negro in a state of fear. Black reached his cell shortly after the Pinkerton man had departed. He played upon the suspect's emotion. He pretended sympathy and offered to see the black carried safely through the 'plot' against him.

Finally, when Black and Scott and headquarters had become convinced that the negro was ripe for confessing, he was carried into Chief Lanford's office. He faced a group of detectives—shirts off, sleeves rolled and a prevailing widespread willingness to wade in.

The sleuths cajoled and coaxed. They warned and threatened. They did everything that detective ingenuity could suggest. Conley seemed adamant. He stuck to his story and never wavered. He was worked into a heat, a boiling, bubbling heat and left therein to think things over.

His questioners stepped into the hallway outside and compared notes. A newsboy arrived with an afternoon newspaper. Glaring headlines announced that pencil factory authorities had publicly charged Conley with murdering Mary Phagan and of trying to shift the crime to their superintendent.

Scott again had an idea. It was born in a dazzling brilliance that was overwhelming.

"Here, boy," he called to the newsie. "Take one of those papers to that nigger in the room."

The boy did as directed. Conley was given the paper containing the accusation. What happened to his emotions isn't on police record. No one knows but Conley. The result, though, is a gilded page in police history.

When Scott and his fellow-examiners returned to the room, the negro was staring blankly at the headline, perspiration streaming and fingers trembling. He glanced at the headquarters men with an air of weak resignation.

"Listen, Mr. Black," he said to the detective, "I'd like to talk to you privately, please, sir."

Black was left with the suspect, closeted in the chief's office. Thirty minutes later he emerged, a smile flooding his face, success in his soul and his mind filled with Conley's startling confession of complicity in disposing of Mary Phagan's body in assistance to his superintendent.

It was the second conflicting story he had told. The first was of having only written the murder notes. It has been replaced by his latter and more incriminating tale, to which he has made a definite and sworn statement.

The prosecution maintains that this last admission solves the Phagan case. It pins the crime conclusively to one of two sources—Frank or the negro.

One or the other will be proved at the coming trial—the trial for which an entire state awaits with unprecedented eagerness—a trial that will be based largely on the amazing result of a hunch, a pure, simple hunch, one of the many frailties that affect us all.

But a frailty few of us can resist.

"The God of Good Luck's Gift—
A whisper of the conscience,

DAILY LIFE OF AN ATLANTA FIREMAN

just off Peters street, when the porch of a burning house caved in upon him.

R. M. Fisher, of Engine House No. 4, died in discharge of his duty July 20, 1908, at Courtland and Gilmer streets, when he was hurled from a ladder before the eyes of hundreds of terror-stricken spectators.

The memory of the remaining two victims is fresh in the minds of everyone.

It was in the early morning of last February 26 that the fire department was called to the corner of Whitehall street and Trinity avenue. There was no fire, but a building undergoing repairs was crumbling in upon the sleeping occupants.

The ladders were hastily run up to the windows, and the first man to mount one of these ladders was J. J. Gillespie. Several men followed him.

Shriek of Terror.

Suddenly there was a wailing shriek of terror from the people below. The firemen leaped—all but Gillespie, who was too high upon the ladder to escape.

"My God, he's gone!" moaned his comrades as they covered their eyes to avoid the horrible sight.

The avalanche of brick crumbled and wavered and crashed down upon brave Gillespie before he had the remotest chance of escape.

It was only two weeks later that the department responded to a call at Washington and Glenn streets. A home was burning. Shortly after the firemen entered the house there were cries for help in the darkness of the second floor. Men dashed to the rescue, but the cries continued, and Chief Cummings himself was first to guess the real cause of the trouble. He found the switch which cut off the electric current, but too late to save the life of Charles Dougherty, who was electrocuted by volts which passed through his body for several minutes.

The people of Atlanta are highly appreciative of the heroism of the men who have died for them. They know that no man hath greater love than to lay down his life for another, and have never failed to respond liberally to help the relatives of the firemen who have died in discharge of their duty.

The Humorous Side.

With thousands of dollars worth of property literally going up in smoke many a fireman has been pleaded with to risk his life to save some lady's pet canary or poodle dog!

On Christmas eve last, there was a fire in a negro rooming house on Peters street. Chief Cummings was there superintending the fight against the flames. Personally he went through the house and aroused the occupants. Just when he thought everybody was out a man rushed to him madly and cried, "Chief, there's a man asleep in a back room on the second floor!"

Quick as a flash the chief was back in the smoke and flames. He found the man and hauled him from his bed.

The fire department is rendering excellent service with the apparatus it has, but Chief Cummings realizes that horse apparatus is rapidly becoming behind the times and inadequate to protect a city of the size of Atlanta. His department is outgrowing the methods of yesterday, and he urges that the city buy as soon as possible automobile apparatus, such as has already been installed in the new stations in Inman Park and West End.

"It is imperative," he says, "that we have the best possible apparatus to protect the great improvements which are the pride of the city and the wonder of the entire country. The West End station is a step in the right direction. The apparatus is up-to-date and efficient. The fire house is the most modern in the country. It is as near like a home as it is possible to make a fire station—and, after all, firemen are human and need the comforts that such a station as No. 14 in West End offers. We should beware lest we fall behind the times."

And thus has Chief Cummings, in his thirty-six years of service, outlived the life of the organization which he helped to create—and, withal, he is still as young as the youngest of them!

A LITTLE STORY OF A BIG MAN FROM THE COUNTRY

This is a story of how a farm boy, born in the foothills of North Carolina, came to Atlanta and made good in a big way in less than five years.

His name is Lindsey Hopkins.

At the age of 24 years he is voluntarily retiring from the presidency of the largest auto sales concern in the south, and will hang out a shingle with the modest inscription, "Private Banker."

In rounding out a big business success at an age when most business men are only beginning to cut their wisdom teeth, Lindsey Hopkins has followed some rules which are amazingly simple.

"I got my philosophy of life at the plow handles," says Mr. Hopkins.

"When my old daddy put me to work up in Rockingham county, N. C., he gave me two pieces of advice. Both were good. But looking back, I am satisfied that neither would have been of any real value without the other. It is the combination that wins. The first piece of advice was to work hard, and the second was to keep my eyes open. I have been trying to do both ever since.

"My advice to any ambitious young man who wants to make a substantial success is be a plodder, but not be a mule. Plod with your head up. You can't get ahead very fast, even by the hardest work, unless you look ahead. It is all right to concentrate your whole soul and energy on sweeping a floor or plowing a furrow—if you know why you are doing it. But nothing is more pathetic than to see a fellow who is a good worker so absorbed in a little two-by-four job that he can't see anything beyond it."

Lindsey Hopkins was probably the first man in the south to recognize the true significance of the coming of the automobile. While older and more experienced heads were still regarding the horseless carriage as a fad, he knew that it had come to stay, and he acted accordingly.

But the first "job" he ever had was as printers' devil on The Greensboro Patriot. Before that time, however, he had developed on the farm a sturdy capacity for hard work. He received the ordinary amount of schooling, going to the public schools in winter and working on the farm in the summer, not because he had to, but because work came natural to him. Later he took a limited course in the University of North Carolina, and formed a life-long habit of reading good books, and later became a traveling salesman for the Atlantic Refining company, and as such became known throughout the south. He was made special representative of the company in Europe. This, however, was in the nature of a preliminary to Mr. Hopkins' real business career. It was when he connected himself with the automobile business that he began to be recognized throughout the south as one of the young captains of industry of this section.

In 1905 he demonstrated the practicality of the automobile for cross country travelling; he started from Atlanta in a one-lung Cadillac and successfully reached Greensboro, N. C., after a sensational trip over roads which had never been traversed before by self-propelling vehicles. It was a sort of personally conducted "Glidden tour," the first in automobile history. The ride has been celebrated throughout the Carolinas by Colonel Al Fairbrother's "Ride of Paul Revere, Jr."

In 1906, through a special concession of the Atlantic Refining company, he became agent for the Reo motor cars as a side issue. Almost over-night he became the greatest auto sales agent in southern auto history. In 1908 he turned down a salary of $12,000 a year and made his first contract for the sale of fifty cars during the season of 1908-9. Since that time Mr. Hopkins has sold 2,121 automobiles in southern territory, involving a net cash transaction of $5,000,000.

At the same time Mr. Hopkins has taken a leading part in the building up of many other southern industries. He was one of the half-dozen men who formed together the three big North Carolina insurance companies and merged them into one strong and successful organization. He is heavily interested in banking and cotton mills and owns thousands of acres of farm land in south Georgia. In Atlanta, where he recently purchased F. L. Seely's palatial home on Peachtree road, he is intrested in banking, real estate, life insurance, cotton and other industries. He is heavily interested in California oil fields.

He took up the aeroplane just as he took up the automobile, formed an aviation exhibition company two years ago, purchased the first Curtis biplane ever sold to an individual and directed successful exhibitions in all parts of the country, and if aviation ever attains a practical and commercial basis Lindsey Hopkins will have a hand in it.

While in appearance and achievement a typical example of the successful and intensely modern business man, Mr. Hopkins is a living refutation of the popular belief indulged in by so many people who have not made money, that a man who achieves material success must do it at the expense of blunting his finer sensibilities and his power to enjoy things that are truly great and beautiful.

Judging by Appearances.

The speaker was Senator Gronna, of North Dakota. He was arguing a tariff clause, relates The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Yes," he continued, "our friends are as mistaken in this matter as the little lady from the middle west, who, on her return from a winter on the Riviera, was recounting to a friend the delights of Nice.

"'And did you visit Monte Carlo?' her friend asked.

"'No, I didn't,' she replied. 'Pop called on him, though. But judging from pop's disappointed look when he got back to the hotel, I guess Monte must have been out.'"

It shows various members of the Southern Coffee and Spice mills force, considering whether to adopt the famous "Rona" brand of cocoa as the national drink of Scotland. The result of the conference was that, while cocoa was good and that more of it should be drunk, it was a different class of beverage altogether from the genuine Scotch, and could not be used for the same purpose, effect or result.

IN THE TRENCHES

Joe White, the genial Mississippi salesman with the A. M. Robinson company, leaves this afternoon for his territory. He remarked before leaving that he was going to clean up down there and that all his orders would be of the "big and prosperous" variety.

While the Firing Line man was on his regular trip down Edgewood avenue last week, he dropped into Anderson Brothers & Rich and was just in time to overhear Mr. Anderson sell a nice contrast for placing a furnace in a new residence. As this is a new line with the company, they are pushing it hard.

The A. E. Hill Manufacturing company, of Atlanta, are just making two foreign shipments of the Hill safety razor blade sharpener. One of these goes to Paris, France, and the other to Berlin, Germany.

Captain W. J. McDaniel, better known as "Captain Bill," proprietor of Happy Hollow Farm, near Decatur, Ga., is at present visiting his daughter, Mrs. O. L. Johnston, who resides in West End.

Salesman Tebo, formerly sales manager in this territory for H. J. Heinz company, has accepted a position with the Dixie Pickle and Preserving company and will take charge of the Alabama territory for them, starting Monday.

H. H. Lee, billing clerk with the Lamar & Rankin Drug company, returned Saturday after his vacation at Charleston, S. C., where he went with the City Salesmen's association's excursion.

George H. Pape, on the South Carolina territory for the All Star Manufacturing company, is in the city for Sunday.

R. H. Learned, the south Florida man for the John Deere Plow company, of Atlanta, has been in the city for three or four days this week, but returned to his territory on Thursday.

Whirlpool Suggested Silencer.

(American Mechinist.)

Mr. Maxim had been working on the development of automobile engine mufflers for some time before he thought of a silencer in connection with a gun. In addition to this was the inventor's desire to enjoy target practice without creating a disturbance. Experiment ensued, covering a couple of years and all kinds of valves, vents, by-passes, expansion chambers, etc., but without success. One morning after his bath the inventor noticed the small whirlpool over the drain hole, the action of which retards the egress of the water. It does not silence it (as this phenomenon is usually accompanied by a more or less pronounced sucking sound), but in a gun the noise of firing is caused by the sudden egress of the gases, and if these could in the same way be slowed down the noise would in proportion be decreased. Acting on this suggestion, a little tube was then made, constructed so as to induce a whirlpool in the escaping gases from the gun. This, when tried, was a success.

THE "PROFIT" OF KENNESAW MOUNTAIN

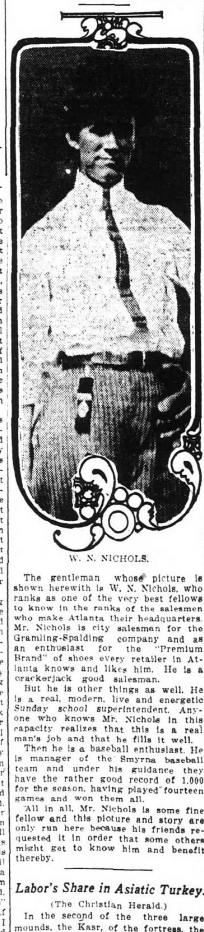
AN ALL-AROUND GOOD MAN, THIS



W. N. NICHOLS.

Dear Sally: I arrived here in Atlanta all right and Henry and Alice met me at the train, or rather at the Terminal station, and after walking up those long wearisome flights of steps I was tuckered out entirely. If there was ever an inconvenient station that new Terminal here is it, for its walk and walk and climb and climb, go through gates, walk about a mile before you get to the front of the place.

Now I am going to tell you about the things I have seen here. In the first place Alice has a real nice home out on the north side, reception hall and portiers and all those kind of things that I never did see much good in. Their three little children, my great nieces, are as sweet as can be, but land alive, you never would know they was her children. She gets up in the morning about 10 o'clock and takes her coffee and lunch in her room, long after Henry has gone downtown, then she fools around her room till after regular dinner time. Why, Sally, before Alice gets up I have done a full day's work at home, milked two cows and set the bread, cooked breakfast washed up the dishes and swept, looked after the children and got them off to school.

About 4 o'clock Alice has the car brought around and goes downtown, I went with her several times, but it was no fun for me loafing around stores and soda fountains and ice cream parlors. It does seem to me that more men and women live on the streets here than any place I ever saw. All day long they are drifting about from one corner to another, from one picture show to another and from one ice cream place to another. I feel so sorry for these folks here in Atlanta, for there are some real likely looking girls and boys and they could be doing so many things if they lived in any kind of a decent place where folks had something to do pretty much all the time like we do back in the country.

And the styles! Why for the first time in my life I am really ashamed that I am a woman. I simply can't write what I have seen here for it will do you nor any one else and good to hear or see.

I want to tell you about Alice and her housekeeping. She don't go to market at all and don't any more know what she is going to have for dinner than if she did not live there. She don't know what chickens or eggs cost; she lets the housekeeper look after everything. Land's a live! I couldn't no more let my house be run that way. Why, she loses all the pleasure of living. And the children, I got after her yesterday when little Mary and Agnes came and said, "Mother, tell us a story." Alice said, "Run along, I don't want to be bothered with you now, I have a headache." Alice pays no more attention to those children than if they were strays or belonged to some one else. They are the dearest little things I ever saw and I wish I had them out home to raise. I was telling them last night while their mother was at a dance about the time we had last fall with that lot of Plymouth Rock chicks and the little darlings didn't know that a hen laid eggs and then hatched out the dearest little yellow chicks ever seen. They wanted to know whether Irish potatoes grew on a vine like grapes or on a tree like figs.

I asked Mary last night if she ever saw her mother plant tomatoes in the garden and she said: "Oh! mother has no garden; she is so society that she don't plant anything. Father asked her once if she wanted a garden in the back lot and she said, 'No; I can't look after all my engagements now, and I have no time for work of any kind.'" I feel real sorry for Henry, for you know he was raised in the country and he don't care so much for society, but Alice has him on the go all the time except when he stays out at nights to attend to some office work. But I always will believe that he is at the club or somewhere else resting up a bit. There sure ain't no rest for him here in this home, and he has no companionship with his wife. I am coming home Friday, for I wouldn't stay here another day and see these dear sweet little children neglected and left with a nurse all day long for anything. I hope that you all have dug the last patch of Irish potatoes. If you don't they will rot in the hill. Tell Jim to put them in the cellar, as they will keep there all right, and don't put over ten eggs under that little Leghorn hen when she gets ready to set.

My! but I'm homesick. Alice wants me to dress three times a day, afternoon for a ride, then for supper and then for a show or something every night. This life here is too strenuous for me. And there is somebody killed every day or so by automobiles. It sure is dangerous to try to walk anywhere at all. Alice went to a dance at a club Monday night and did not get home till 4 in the morning. Just think of it—just about the time Jim rings the bell for the hands to get out for cotton chopping. Henry didn't go to work next day and Alice had an awful "head" she said and seemed that she wanted nothing but ice water all day.

Well, this may be living, and living high, but I'll take mine low and be contented. You know it's pretty hard to be extra good anyway, but when you are forever on the go and everything around you artificial and nothing to remind you of nature or the Creator it's about the last thing any one thinks of. And talk of being neighborly! Why when I asked Alice who lived next door she said, "I don't know" and "I don't care"—just think of it! If any of the folks living near me was to get sick or need anything I would feel real put out about it if they didn't call on me or some of my folks to come over and help them out. You remember how last summer when Jane Wilson's youngest boy got took down with measles how you and me took turns sitting up with him. This kind of living don't suit your ma. Tell Jim to meet me at the train Friday evening at 6 o'clock, and tell him to have the light buggy if he is going to drive the bay mare, as she is likely to be a bit lame from that nail that stuck in her foot, and have a plate of biscuit a foot high, for I am famished for some shore nough food, and if anybody ever says "salads" to me any more I'll faint, and loaf bread, my my—I chewed it, and I chawed it, and I soaked it and toasted it, and it never did have any taste or flavor. Well, good night dear. Kiss all the folks for me. I am wild to get back. Your fond mother,

CYNTHIA.

(From The Lewiston, Me., Sun.)

Remember the railroad is at the foundation of our industrial and commercial system. To stop transportation is like stopping the circulation of toe blood. Some twenty-five or thirty years ago there was a great snowstorm that blocked the streets of New York city and paralyzed the railroads. The paralysis did not last many days; but in that short time there was great suffering; and even greater was the fear, for New York city could not live many days without the food supplies that are pouring in over the railroads day and night. The collapse of the railroads of the nited States would mean the starvation of millions. It would be a greater calamity than any war ever reported. More destructive than many earthquakes.

FINE AUTO HIGHWAY OUT OF ATLANTA

By Smith Clayton.

Do you know George Rucker, of The Alpharetta Free Press, and the good old county of Milton? No?

Well, that argues yourself, unknown. There is not a more progressive citizen of north Georgia. For many months he has been striking sledge-hammer blows in his paper. The Alpharetta Free Press, in advocacy of one of the greatest developments that ever engaged the power of the press.

He stands for progress, the advancement of Atlanta, the development of his section, all of which will redound to the upbuilding of north Georgia and the extension of the greatness and glory of Georgia and the south.

I took a few turns with Editor Rucker in the rotunda of the Kimball House the other night, and in a few pungent sentences the unfolded one of the grandest and most feasible enterprises of the day.

The Talk.

"What about it?" I asked.

"It is the thing to build," said he. The proposed route would be straight out Peachtree street to Roswell, on by Alpharetta, Cumming, Dawsonville to Dahlonega. It is the greatest neet of that section which has the richest farming lands in all Georgia, those great fuley, loamy, fruitful bottom lands, where every product necessary for man and beast can be raised.

The Modern Road.

"Yes, a strictly up-to-date highway as smooth and beautiful as Peachtree street out to Buckhead and Brookhaven, not less than thirty feet wide and preferably built of chert, which would cost upwards of $5,000 a mile, I think, but a fine highway it would be, sand, it is stated, could be constructed for from $1,000 to $1,500 per mile."

"Oil could also be used?"

"What?

Partly Built.

"Why, the superb driveway from Atlanta to Roswell, which extends to the river bridge at that point. This driveway is a continuation of your splendid Peachtree street and the grand highway proposed would be a continuation of the driveway from Atlanta to Roswell bridge."

"A capital idea—and a big start."

Sinews of War.

"Why, certainly. The idea would be to raise the money for this great development in Atlanta and from the land owners along the proposed route and to put to work on the great road the convicts in the counties of Cobb, Milton, Forsyth, Dawson and Lumpkin, the route taken. You can see how immediately such a grand permanent, public improvement would benefit the section through which it is built. It would not only add most materially to the wealth and population of that section, but enhance greatly the value of all property along the route. I am satisfied that the people of the towns and counties which it would pierce would contribute liberally to the construction of this highway and Atlanta, which is another name for progress and advancement, would surely do her part.

What It Would Do.

"In my opinion," said Mr. Rucker, measuring his words, "such a highway would be worth half a million dollars to the section traversed and a million dollars to Atlanta. Why?

"Because it would move the towns and counties of that section closer to Atlanta and the wealth of produce from that section which now goes to Gainesville, Buford and other points on the Southern railroad, would be diverted by trucks running on this highway to Atlanta. The transportation would be far quicker, far more convenient and less expensive. A farmer, for instance, near Dahlonega, could put 5,000 pounds of produce on a truck, run it down to the Atlanta market in the morning and return home in the afternoon. This is just a sample illustration. Of course, such a highway with a rapid outlet for produce to a great market would lead to the general use of trucks such as are used by farmers in the middle west all along the route, and long trucks with a capacity of five tons would be rolling into Atlanta from all along the line of this magnificent highway."

Killing Distance.

"How far is Dahlonega from Atlanta?"

"About seventy miles. That distance could be made in a few hours. Besides all that has been said, government aid could be asked and probably gotten in the construction, on the idea of a national highway. You see, double daily mails would go over this great road from Atlanta to Dahlonega delivered. Also, Roswell, Alpharetta, Cumming and Dawsonville. Then, too, the delivery of the free rural mail would be greatly facilitated."

Mr. Rucker went on to say that this highway would be, also, a grand driveway for automobiles, forming the greatest automobile and truck road in the south. This would interest the automobile people greatly and they would probably offer substantial aid. As a highway combining the widest utility with the highest pleasure, it would prove a boon and a tremendous benefit to all farmers and all joyriders.

He said, also, that Alpharetta already had about thirty automobiles. He could get in his car and make the spin from Roswell bridge to Atlanta in thirty-five minutes.

It Would Double.

"How about the population along the route?" he was asked.

"Well, if built I believe it would be doubled in a few years.

"Roswell now has about 1,000, Alpharetta 500, Cumming 500, Dawsonville 350 and Dahlonega about 1,000.

"This grand highway would practically put these towns within elbow reach of each other, practically bring them and their counties almost to the doors of Atlanta.

"Another big thing," he concluded, "Gainesville is the biggest egg and chicken market in the country and this important produce in great part goes from the section indicated. The grand highway would divert this enormous trade from Milton, Forsyth, Dawson and Lumpkin to Atlanta."

Billikens Win Two.

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 12.—Montgomery defeated Chattanooga twice today, the locals failing to score in either game. Coveleskie lost a no-hit game in the first contest, Montgomery's run scoring on a base on balls, the pitcher's wild throw to first and Walker's sacrifice fly. Two sensational catches by Walker each averted a run off Case in the first game, while the same player made two more in the second and Jantzen two equally as sensational, each catch coming with two men on base. Both games were called at the end of the seventh inning by agreement.

Nashville, Tenn., July 12.—Nashville batted Wilson hard today and had no trouble taking the last game of the series from New Orleans by the score of 7 to 2. Cobb got back into the game after a week's layoff because of an injured knee, essayed to play second base. He had four easy chances and made three glaring errors.

Brown passed every man on the Detroit team at least once. Plank relieved him. In the eighth the Detroit's batted around, making five singles.

REAL ESTATE TALK BY ADAIR

What are the advantages of real estate? Stability of value, income production, enhancement and convertibility are some of its advantages. We get a good idea of the stability of real estate values right now, when there is a general depression all over the country. Stocks are a drug on the market; bonds do not sell at all. Securities have shrunk to the amount loaned on them, and consequently banks are calling the loans. Right here let us notice the part which real estate plays in loan transactions. Loans are made on a 50 per cent reserve margin, while stock loans to banks are made on a much narrower margin; sometimes up to 90 per cent of value. A slight depression upsets the factor of safety and short-time loans are called. Real estate loans are usually made for a period of five years, amply margined, and they are not disturbed by temporary panics.

One of the big eastern life insurance companies now has 40 per cent of its entire assets in real estate loans. For years it has gradually disposed of bonds and increased its mortgage loans, and will in time carry 50 per cent of its investments in such security. This company, in its annual statement, uses some peculiar language. "On account of EXCESS INTEREST EARNING we are enabled to return to policyholders an unusually large proportion of premiums." This "excess interest earning" came from not only our fine, high net rate obtained from real estate loans, but it is a rudimentary statement that a 6 per cent mortgage will yield more income than a 4½ per cent bond. In handling large funds the excess interest earning is enormous.

Collier's Weekly recently made the most darling statement ever published in a serious paper about national prominence. Not even a real estate agent would have made such a statement. Collier's paper, which is noted for its philosophic views on public matters, advises all life insurance companies to buy stocks. It says that as land is the only thing that actually appreciates in value, stocks and bonds are constantly depreciating. Due to the decreased purchasing power of the dollar, any security with a fixed income depreciates in value. Printing presses are constantly turning out more stocks and more bonds. Corporation directors meet and increase their capital stock one million or one hundred million. Bear always in mind that no board of directors can meet and issue more land.

The area of the earth's surface is limited. It is a fixed quantity. Any high school boy can calculate it. Three-fourths of it is water; this fine old world of ours is really a fishery. Deduct three-fourths for water, then deduct for the north and south pole regions, arctic lands, land too cold or too hot to live in; mountain ranges, deserts, barren rocky wastes and swamps. The available supply of actual land is left; it is a limited quantity. It is sufficient for the present time, but no engraving plants are turning out any more of it. Land. Can you conceive of a board of directors meeting and saying: "Let's print us some more acres; dad blame the public has bought up all we previously issued?"

Collier's Weekly has a habit of digging into the fundamental philosophy of things; it says the only way that life insurance companies can meet mortality statistics is with their pyramidal obligations. It is to buy land and hold it for enhancement. The purchasing power of a dollar constantly decreases; anything with a fixed income depreciates in value; the only thing that actually increases in value is land itself. This is a daring utterance, but it is a true one. Not even the deep thinker, not the hasty statement of some real estate agent trying to sell a lot. The fact that value of land has long been recognized, land investments are historically and classic. Shakespeare spoke frequently of real estate. One of his characters in King Lear said: "I must have land, if not by birth, then by wit." The earnings from Shakespeare's own plays were invested in real estate; he bought 160 acres of arable land near Stratford at $20 an acre, or $3,200. In Hamlet he describes a certain lawyer as "a great buyer of land." So are many of the successful lawyers of today; they are real estate owners and "great buyers of land."

Real estate is not a new issue, just signed by president and secretary, and expected to pay big dividends; it is an old institution, tried and tested over and over again. The most English laws deal with the ownership of land, and methods of making it secure. In the quaint phraseology of old English law, title "signifies the means whereby a man cometh to land and becomes by it he holdeth and defendeth the land." Real estate has the best of traditions back of it. It is a good investment for funds is always open and frank. It is one of the things that shows for itself. Being a portion of the earth's surface, it can be accurately measured, and lies there. No one need be deceived about a real estate transaction. None can misrepresent the size of a lot; no one can take a tape line and measure it. If a lot is described as high or low or level, your own eye can readily verify the assertion. Land sales are made subject to approval of title by an abstract of your own selection. As to the value of land, you can talk freely to adjoining owners, or neighboring owners, owners of similar property, or owners of commutative property. None need be deceived about the value of land, its very history is spread on public documents.

Real estate should appeal to people who seek permanent and enduring value. Bear this in mind, that the very property you feel is good enough to keep, to lay aside and forget about, to pass on from age to age, to those who are dear to you—the very property you consider good enough for this sacred purpose is the property someone else will want. Do not buy anything you would not be willing to have left on your hands. It is all right to buy and sell again (many people do), but that should not be the underlying motive. Good business property, tied up with leases and contracts and involved in the very commercial fabric of the city, is about as immune from disturbance as any form of investment that man has devised. Let the person who has to pay the rent testify as to certainty of income. Circumstances do not absolve him. When times are hard and dividends fail, the rent payer still has to write his check each month. And when a batch of old yellow deeds and leases, safely locked in a deposit vault, a story of enhancement comes to light that no stocks or bonds ever matched.

Bearing of Municipal Purity Upon the Home

We may build the fence ever so high around the inside purity of our domain, but we cannot keep out the germ that lurks just outside, or that unintentionally our way from some pestilential spot, somewhere in the city.

Two pigeons have set up housekeeping in a near-by gutter. Here they have built their nest and there are in it two pretty white eggs.

Over these two never lovingly and when gray lady bird goes out for her constitutional the white-coated man of the house takes her place on the nest, guarding the precious contents with fatherly solicitude. Their devotion is beautiful to see, and yet unscientifically gladness at the heavens and wonders if some sudden storm cloud may not burst and demolish this dream of a home.

One definition of a muck raker is that he is not a pessimist, but a working optimist who sees so much good in things that he believing, makes more meant to be good and sails in to make them so. He is much in evidence in many places, and it will be the time to come unto the kingdom for such a time as this. Perhaps we have been covering our heads in the sand and refusing to look at existing evils from fear, perchance because they have not come our way, nor affected our very own.

Jane Addams says: "Very few facts but the conditions and results of the social evil lie so far away from good women is largely responsible for the secrecy and hypocrisy upon which it thrives. Most good women will probably never consent to break through their ignorance as to the facts of social evil which has ever been the incentive to which even timid women have responded.

Social Conscience Awakening.

Everywhere the social conscience seems to be awakening. We are passing from an era of individualism to one of Association. Christ's question: "Am I my brother's keeper" is being answered with a resounding, "Yes, so far as you can influence him or effect his well-being."

The platform, the daily press and the literature of the times are all asking and trying to answer this same question of man's duty to man and the newer question of his attitude toward woman. Because many things have been in the longer ago taken upon for their being. Everything is being examined. Many things have been found wanting. The immorality of women and the brutishness of men have to be persuaded, coaxed and constantly urged by very large business

On The Constitution Firing Line With the Commercial Travelers

GET IT WHILE IT'S HOT

J. D. Burrus, special wagon salesman with the John Deere Plow company, returned to the head office at Moline, Ill., last Friday, after a successful trip of some weeks around the southern territory.

The M. C. Kiser company report some exceptionally good business from O. E. Kenimer.

The S. P. Richards company state that the steady gliding stride of their salesmen, John "Heavenly" Huff and J. M. Bennett, is certainly bringing in the results and that they will always rank in the brilliant class of salesmen as far as results go—which is all the way.

T. H. Withers & Sons, the contractors of Cartersville, Ga., stated that they had just two more contracts for residence building such as the one they had advertised in last week's Constitution Firing Line. They state that if their Atlanta business keeps growing that at its present rate that they will have to move their headquarters here.

T. A. Gramling, of the Gramling-Spalding company, will leave within the next few days for Indianapolis, Ind., where he will spend several weeks.

Sales Manager O. L. Johnston, of the Carroll Adams Shoe company, motored through to Macon last week. Mr. Johnston remarked in conversation that he did not call himself a "drummer." Rather, he said, he is an "ambassador of trade." He stated that he just goes after the big orders, and does not fritter away his time with the little files.

T. P. A. JOTTINGS

BY W. M. JENKINS,
Press Chairman, Georgia Division, T. P. A.

There is no method of making friends equal to the method of making good.

There is something in freedom and justice that narrow souls cannot dare to admire.

We believe in freedom and justice, and have no remedy against the man who calls us an idiot for presenting our side of the case, more than granting him the privilege to judge and submitting the matter as an appeal to The Constitution Firing Line's many readers. We think it is noble to publish truth, regardless of the man, men or institutions that differ with us.

Texas came to Richmond with the year's record for increased membership. Will Virginia go to Houston with similar credentials? This question can only be answered by Virginia and Texas.

Virginia and Texas are in the limelight, and are incidentally pitted against each other in the contest for a place in class A. Any present advantage of one over the other is not necessarily permanent—nor is it necessarily temporary. It all depends on Virginia—and Texas.

Georgia, formerly in class B, has passed the corresponding division, and is now in class A.

We are gradually climbing, and want all the available good members possible. Won't you come in and help us?

All traveling salesmen eligible should send in their applications for membership to our worthy secretary, Hon. J. H. Andrews, Atlanta, Ga. Eleven dollars turns the trick, and you will also get an accident policy that would ordinarily cost $25. The T. P. A. is just as good, if not better, for several reasons.

Blessings some time come to us in the shape of sickness, pains, sufferings, losses and disappointments. We set to know who our true friends are, but we can be patient and trust in Almighty God that higher power will in due time be manifested in its proper light.

There are many evils which too often attend wealth, and if we will observe more closely we will find they are greater than those found in poverty.

Equal rights to all is a thing of the past, or at least of small consequence to those in power. But special privilege to some few is of the greatest importance. When will the ruling classes do right? Ever, or never?

If this world is ever redeemed from ignorance, sorrow, distress, woe, want and poverty, it will be by the most supreme unselfish goodwill influence and power of commonsense business men, and not through hawk-eyed people that can see every fault and read all mistakes and take minutes notice of every wrong act that may unintentionally be committed. We need good men as leaders, but brass band reformers and politicians do not answer to the call generally.

Receive the traveling man with a smile and part with him as your friend—it will do you both good.

Listen! It would take but a few minutes of your time to weave the golden threads of kindness into the warp and woof of your makeup and business life daily. Don't offer a gentleman one finger to shake when you can just as well give him your hand. You can be happy if you will, and make others happy also.

We know some people and institutions that eulogize after a man is gone. We prefer that you tell us now while we live of our good acts. It will encourage us to think better, live better and be better.

We are not looking for perfection. The most perfect life, like the fairest flower, has some defect, but we would have honesty, faithfulness and justice in all branches of business, among all men. These above all other considerations.

Real genuine commonsense men are very few—they are an exception, but wherever you find them you can trust them. Their ability may vary, but they are safe just the same, whether salesmen, merchants, bankers, brokers, lawyers, doctors or well diggers. But those who are petted and spoiled, waited them, cuddled and coddled, cared for in every conceivable way, laughed with and chuckled to cannot be much of anything outside of reformers, and they should be the first to be reformed.

The T. P. A's are trying to create and form ties of friendship that will prove binding, sacred and true forever, not just for a day or two, as emergency would have, but that kind which grows greater as we get older. Let our policy be "Peace and good will to all mankind."

Some men say we have no right to question the motives or good intentions of those who have banded themselves together in cliques for what they deem the protection of law. But we say, if some men had never questioned the justice of the law and defied the law, there would be today no such thing as freedom.

Military despots of the Cossack, Turkish, Huerta and Russian kind for Georgia are deplorable, and we trust the present legislature will pass the Slade bill. The common people have rights that should be considered as a whole and not for special privilege alone. To shoot innocent citizens down in the streets like dogs would give swing and power to anarchy as nothing else could do.

For one time we are with those wanting chaingang reform.

The Origin of "Valet."

(From The London Chronicle.)

We have only ourselves, or rather, our forefathers, to blame for the trouble about the pronunciation of "valet." If they had stuck to "varlet" there would have been no difficulty. "Valet" and "varlet" are the same word, meaning, originally, just a boy, the diminutive of "vassal," a man. Unfortunately, when our ancestors applied a word meaning a boy to signify a servant, they went on to make it bear a scornful sense. And so "varlet" degenerated hopelessly, just as did "knave," which is simply the German "knabe," boy.

BUSINESS BUILDERS

THE SALESMAN'S MOTTO: I will accomplish everything within the power of energy, tact and resourcefulness; nay, more, I will attempt and overcome the impossible.

EMPLOYEES SUGGESTIONS

There are a number of business houses today which are encouraging their employees to contribute any suggestions they may have for the better conduct of the business and the elimination of waste motion.

This is a feature of all businesses which are employing large numbers of people which has been too much overlooked in the past.

One large concern, to the writer's knowledge, offers a small bonus for every idea which is accepted, and in various other ways encourages the men to help with their brains and originality. The executive head of a business should approach this matter with care and thought, or he will scare off much valuable help which he would otherwise get.

It is probable that the employees of a factory will give fifty ideas which are impracticable, and in many cases foolish, for one which is worth considering, but it is worth the time and trouble to receive the fifty impracticable ones with courtesy for the sake of the one good one which will save time and money. It should always be remembered that it is not good business to treat the employee who is making the suggestion with any kind of reception other than the most attentive and courteous. If the manager brusquely refuses to use the idea, or almost laughs in the man's face at the foolishness of it, it is not likely that man will feel inclined to come again with another idea. But if he is received with proper attention and listened to with courtesy, and, if his idea is not practical, if it is explained to him why it is not, he will go away with the feeling that he is at any rate thought to be of value to the company, and with the determination to try again and "put one over" next time, the man will have been made of more value than ever before to his company, and will have been induced to take more interest in the work. In this way, even if the idea was worthless, the man himself will have an increased value to the company and the manager will have gotten into closer touch with his employee.

DIRECTING PUBLICITY.

There is much advertising written which has no special appeal to any class of people and which, on this account, frequently loses a great part of its effect. Every advertisement written has a special class of the public to which it should appeal, but there is one section of the population to which practically every ad should be more or less directed and which is too often neglected. This is the women.

It is hard to estimate the extent of the influence which the women exercise in the matter of purchasing. Of course it is self-evident that it is the women who are most interested in department store advertising and the allied businesses. But it is also a fact that the women have a great deal to do with every purchase that is made, whether it is for their own use or for that of the male members of the family. It is certain that the wife takes a great interest in whatever is to come into her house; whether it be groceries, clothes for herself, decorations for her tables and walls, or clothes for her husband. A prominent gents' furnisher in a large city recognizes this fact, and he has made a mailing list of the wives and mothers of all his customers. Every Christmas he mails a dainty reminder of his store, addressed exclusively to the women. A woman is always pleased to get anything decorative, and this one idea has brought in more money to the business than any other advertising idea which the merchant has ever used.

All merchants should always remember the important part the women play in directing purchases, and direct their publicity energies accordingly. About the only thing that a woman does not direct the buying of is a Christmas present for herself, and very frequently she indicates her choice in this matter also.

CHEERFULNESS.

The man who regards business in the proper light will always remember that the chief reason he is in business is in order to pay dividends. There are many ways of going about this job of earning dividends for the business, and the cause of much of the suffering in the world is simply because business men have had a mistaken idea of what methods will bring in the dividends surest. Child labor, inadequate wages, graft and crooked dealing are all the offshoots of the dividend-paying idea, and, at the root of the matter, they are all unnecessary offshoots. It is an absolute fact that the man who acts in the fairest and squarest manner toward those with whom he lives, whether they are his employers, employes or family connections, will eventually get the most dividends out of his business, and out of the most important business there is, the business of living.

But there is one dividend bringer which is a sure paying investment to every business, paying in hard dollars and cents. And that is cheerfulness. There is nothing which will popularize a retail store with the shoppers more rapidly than cheerful clerks, who make the shopper forget the rain and cold outside and the little inconveniences which they sometimes have to undergo.

To the traveling salesman there is nothing which will pay him and his firm better than a well-cultivated spirit of cheerfulness. Practically every salesman realizes the importance of optimism and practices it daily. But it is little use to preach good times with a long face. The man who brings the feeling of good times into a merchant's store is he who comes in with a cheery smile, a glad handclasp and a general effect of "all is well in this best of all possible worlds."

The factory which gets the best results out of the workmen is the one where there is a universal spirit of good fellowship, and where the manager who goes through sees the men enjoying their work and doing it with that spirit of interest and willing effort which gets results quicker than any other.

Cheerfulness in all business is the best paying investment there is. Cultivate it.

In The Trenches

C. S. Harley, with the Consolidated Paper company, is in the Greenwood territory at present, gathering in the good orders, while J. C. Mason will spend Sunday at his home in Cuthbert, Ga.

J. A. DeShong, of J. A. DeShong & Son, was a visiting merchant with the Dougherty-Little-Redwine company yesterday. Mr. DeShong comes from the Stone Mountain district.

Manager Lynn Fort, of the Lamar & Rankin Drug Co., is at present in Franklin, N. C., on a short vacation, and is expected back sometime this week.

E. C. Watson, on the Birmingham territory for the M. C. Kiser company, is sending in some remarkably good business these days.

W. O. Stamps, of Fain & Stamps, has been busy of late removing his home into the attractive new house he has bought on Myrtle street, which runs off Ponce de Leon, parallel with Peachtree.

All traveling men are urged to attend the meeting of the Atlanta camp of Gideons, which meets today at 2 o'clock in the convention hall of the Piedmont hotel.

E. L. Adams, of the E. L. Adams company, will spend Sunday with his parents at Jackson, Ga. Mr. Adams returned last Thursday from Birmingham, where he went on business last Sunday.

O. C. Long, with the S. P. Richards company (he is that popular city salesman of theirs), returned last week from a fishing trip on the Flint river at Albany, Ga. He is telling stories, of course, and if he fishes as well as he spins fish yarns, he is a wonder with the rod.

W. O. Stamps, Jr., son of the well-known member of the firm of Fain & Stamps, is at present on his vacation at Indian Springs. Mr. Stamps, Jr., is one of the best business men of his age in the city, and he deserves a good and enjoyable vacation.

Sidney Ruans, of the force of the E. L. Adams company, is in Macon this week on account of the death of his uncle, A. R. Tinsley, the well-known business man of that city.

C. J. Finker, with the M. C. Kiser company, is out on his territory again after an enforced absence of ten days on account of sickness.

The Married Man.

(From The New York Evening Sun.)

There's rattlers an' terantillas,
There's centerpedes with pisened fuz,
An' puffon snakes that measure mor'n a span;
There's lizards given and crocodiles;
But none can equal the fierce wiles
Of that ophidian wretch, the Married Man!

A Gila monster he, and allers willin'
To snare your little hearts—the hellish villain!
He's full of gulle an' every evil plan!
With devilish art he'll win you,
Then he'll blister, bile and skin you,
So, maiden dear, beware the Married man!

Yes! Maiden so etherial
Ye gals with hopes siderial—
Now gather round and hear me while you can;
When you go in summer troupin',
Keep an eye that's cautious, snoopin',
An' beware that Yeller Dog, the Married Man!

Most Accidents Preventable.

The Pensylvania railroad, which has comparatively few accidents considering the extent of the system, makes a careful analysis of every accident to discover its fundamental cause. Their investigation shows that 70 per cent of all the accidents in 1912, whether the derailment of a passenger train or simply the case of a woman tripping on station steps, could have been prevented if employees had exercised special caution. The company, through its general manager, has made a personal appeal for the co-operation of every employee in the prevention of accidents, and to every employee has been given a book entitled "Safety Hints and Suggestions for the Prevention of Personal Injury Accidents."

Gossip of Georgians in the Metropolis

By R. S. Carraway, The Constitution's New York Bureau.

New York, July 12.—(Special.)—Edward Rochie Hardy, Jr., a 5-year-old Georgia boy, began his college education early when he was enrolled one day this week as a regularly matriculated student of the New York university in its course on school gardens. He filled out his own application blank, signed his name, and then was questioned by Professor Henry Griscom Parsons, who is the instructor in that course.

"I found that while he was attending kindergarten in Georgia he was solving intricate problems in arithmetic, even in algebra," said Professor Parsons. "He is a prodigy that has found his way to one of the large centers of learning. Before the summer is ended he will be competent to direct any school principal or teacher in the successful building of school gardens."

"Oh, no, the course will not be difficult for me," said the boy to The Constitution's correspondent. "I have already studied the values of fertilizers in close areas, the temperatures and the moisture. I now expect to learn what to do to banish germs and parasites, and also I expect to learn something of grafting."

Young Hardy speaks English, French, Italian and German, and is the youngest matriculated student ever enrolled in New York university. He is the son of Professor Hardy, of New York university, and of Dr. Sarah Browne Belcher Hardy. Besides his college course, he also has a private tutor, who is Miss Emily Mae, formerly principal of the Georgia State College for Women at Milledgeville, Ga.

Colonel Pleasant A. Stovall, editor and publisher of The Savannah Press, who was recently appointed minister to Switzerland by President Wilson, will sail for his post July 29. Colonel Stovall has been in Washington for the past several weeks receiving instructions from the state department. Mrs. Stovall was Miss Gaudal, of Augusta. A number of Colonel Stovall's New York friends will give a farewell reception at the Hotel McAlpin previous to his sailing.

Louis Eiseman and daughters, Misses Erma and Wilmer, of Atlanta, who have been spending several weeks in Washington, came on to New York early in the week, and on Thursday sailed to spend the summer abroad. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Nordlinger, of Washington.

Miss Frances Newman, of Atlanta, who has been spending a few weeks in this city, left this week for Asheville, where she will be joined by her mother, and they will spend several months at the North Carolina resort.

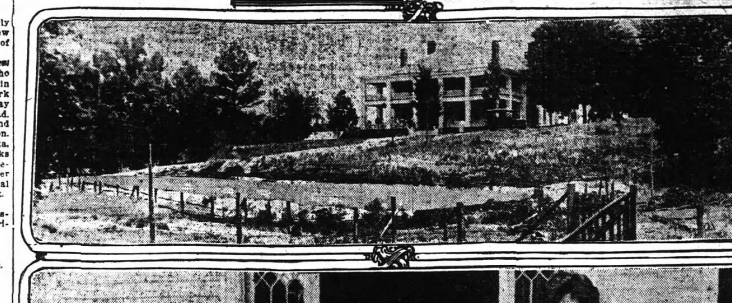
Eight Girls Make Merry Houseparty at Campbell Summer Home



Did you ever see a bunch of laughing, happy-faced girls on a merry house party at a summer home in the country? Ever watch them frolic over the lawn, or sit on the porch in a mirthful circle and talk and gossip, and gossip and talk—enjoying every minute of life?

Then you know just what has been going on at "Lake Nelida," the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Campbell, near Stonewall, Ga., in Campbell county, during the past week. Eight young ladies from different parts of the state are gathered in the merry group and having the time of their lives on the Campbell place this week.

They were just far enough away from the heat and rush of Atlanta to keep cool night and day. And they're close enough to ride into the city to go shopping in a bunch when they want to. Mr. Campbell's summer home is in Campbell county, 22 miles from Atlanta, and 6 miles from Stonewall. So it's a real country! But that's just what is most enjoyed by this merry group, for they get out and play just like little girls on the big farm that surrounds the Campbell home. In front of the home is a swimming pool more than one hundred feet long—shown in the foreground of the picture.

The hosts at the house party are the three charming daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell—Misses Daisy, Nell and Inez Campbell.

The interesting picture of the girls show far better than words the happiness and delight that has reigned with the merry house party. The handsome country home of the Campbells, and the swimming pool is also shown in the picture.

By JAMES J. GORBETT,
(Former Heavyweight Champion of the World. Writing Exclusively for The Constitution.)

New York, July 12.—(Special.)—Willie Ritchie is the classiest lightweight champion we have had since the days when the late Joe Gans ruled supreme in the division.

There were a number of so-called experts who asserted that Willie was a very lucky youth when the referee awarded him the title on a foul in the battle with Ad Wolgast, and referred to him as an "accidental" champion, but recent developments have proved his right to the championship.

Ritchie's impressive victory over Joe Rivers, the seeming youngster from Los Angeles, has satisfied the most sceptical among fight followers that he is the "goods," and that he is in every respect a worthy holder of a title held in the past by such great exponents of the manly art as Jack McAuliffe, "Kid" Lavigne, Frank Erne and Gans.

Willie began his career in San Francisco in 1910, but he was practically unknown until two years ago when he first began to attract attention as Packey McFarland's sparring partner. It was while assisting McFarland to train for the match with "Harlem Tommy" Murphy that Willie was given a hurry call to substitute for the appendicitis stricken Wolgast in the match with Freddy Welsh, champion lightweight of Great Britain, and one of the most scientific boys of the weight in the world.

His Welsh Bout.

Ritchie's showing on that occasion was little short of sensational for a comparative novice, and while he lost the decision after a hard-fought contest of twenty rounds, his class was established then and there. Experts who had witnessed the battle agreed that he was one of the most promising of the younger lightweights.

Willie came east shortly afterwards, but the best boys in this locality, among them Leach Cross, gave him a wide berth. It was his ambition to box before a New York crowd, for he was smart enough to realize that a good showing here would be a big boost, but a suitable opponent could not be found to meet him, and he was forced to hop-scotch around the country in search of matches.

Ritchie's first real opportunity after the Welsh battle came when Ad Wolgast returned to the ring following his long siege in dry dock. Ad selected Willie to meet him in a four-round bout at San Francisco, and while no decision was given per previous agreement, the honors easily belonged to the youngster. Willie followed this up with a ten-round set-to with Joe Mandot, at that time looked upon as champion material, and clearly demonstrated superiority over the southerner.

Then came the fight with Wolgast for the title. Willie gradually wore down the one-time terror of the lightweights until he had him in such bad shape that to save himself from the ignominy of a knock out Ad resorted to the tactics of a hard loser and deliberately fouled his opponent.

Under Billy Nolan's management Ritchie devoted the next six months to traveling about the country filling theatrical engagements. During that time he refused to consider challenges, and, as a result, incurred the displeasure of the critics who referred to him as a "stage" fighter and accused him of being afraid to defend the championship. It is believed that the "panning" to which the champion was subjected at this time had much to do with the subsequent split with Nolan.

Finally Willie announced he was ready to fight again, and to his credit it must be said did not look for an easy mark. On contrary he selected Joe Rivers, one of the toughest propositions in the lightweight division, and proved his class to everyone's complete satisfaction by putting the Mexican away in eleven rounds.

Probable Opponents.

Ritchie is that very rare combination of scientific boxer and hard hitter, which is a combination hard to beat. There is no reason to believe that he will not hold the title for a long time—quite as long even as the great Gans. There is no one in sight who looks good enough to beat him at 133 or 134 ringside. Leach Cross might give him an argument for a few rounds, but Willie's superior science and generalship should enable him to beat the New Yorker over any route from ten rounds to a finish.

Freddy Welsh is another who would give Ritchie a battle. Freddy is a very clever boxer, every bit as scientific as Ritchie, if not a bit more so, but he is not so young as he used to be, while Willie has that great asset, youth, in his favor. And we think he might succeed in holding the champion even for ten rounds or so, could hardly hope to beat him in a longer match. Ritchie's superior hitting powers and stamina would give him the edge in a twenty-round bout.

Of course, there is our old friend, Packey McFarland. We will have to admit that Packey might turn the trick, but as he will not consent to 133 or 134 ringside, that seems to let him out of the argument. Packey would like nothing better than a fight with his former sparring partner over and old distance, but it is doubtful if he will ever consent to

A Rat-Power Motor.

For the best results, the same periodical says, a nimble and sinewy rat weighing about three pounds should be used. As soon as the gas inspection is finished, or the helmet man returns to his base of supplies, the faithful animal upon the treadmill may be gently removed, carefully curried and rubbed down, given food and water and allowed to sleep and recuperate for the next shift.

It is asserted that many advantages are to be gained from the employment of this ingenious gas detecting animal. The supply of motive power is always abundant and cheap around the mines, so much, in fact, that it may rightfully be regarded as a by-product. The expense of feeding an adequate number of rats while in captivity is small, since to keep them in good running condition they should not be allowed to acquire superfluous flesh, as this renders them phlegmatic and short winded.

In Simplified Spelling.

(From The Columbus Dispatch.)

Simplified spelling is not new. They had it in Breathitt county, Kentucky, famous for its feuds, early in the last century. While engaged in relief work in that state, L. E. Stein, special agent of the Red Cross, obtained a verbatim copy of what is reputed to be the first warrant issued in Breathitt county. It is something of a curiosity. It reads:

"State of Jetts Creek, Breathitt County, Kentucky.

"I, Jackson Terry, III official majustrate squire and Justice of the pece do hereby iss the following rit against Henderson Harris charging him with assalt and the battery and the breech of the pece, on his brutherinlaw, tom Fox by name, this warrent cuses him of sickin, bitin and throwin rocks & doing everything that was mean and contrary to law in the State of Jetts creek and aforsaid.

The Opal.

(From Harper's Weekly.)

Experts in such matters assure us that among jewels the opal alone defies the ingenuity of the imitator. The stone owes its charm not so much to its own intrinsic merits as to the splendor of the rays of light it reflects. It has been called "the chameleon of stones" and it has always been a great favorite with lovers of gems. Nearly 2,000 years ago Pliny remarked that it "displays at once the piercing fires of carbuncles, the purple brilliancy of the amethysts, and the sea green of emeralds, the whole blended together and refulgent with a brightness that is quite incredible."

The opal is a stone "with a temper." Its diamond rises superior to climate as does the ruby, the emerald and the sapphire, but the opal is of such delicate organization that when exposed to severe cold it loses color and under the influence of excessive moisture becomes dull. It is a curious fact, however, that the temperature of one's hand will cause it to resume its wonted fire and brilliancy as will also be the case when it is exposed to the direct rays of the sun.

The opal has always been invested with much charm, mystery and superstition. The Greeks believed that it possessed the power of bestowing second sight on those under its influence, provided the stone was not employed toward selfish ends. Misuse of the opal resulted in divers misfortunes. And so originated the notion that the opal was unlucky. Succeeding generations have kept alive this superstition which has been utilized by many writers among whom may be mentioned Sir Walter Scott by whom in "Anne of Geierstein," the opal is made to play an unfortunate part.

The Romans were so fond of the opal that they bestowed upon it the name of lovely youth, but, surrounded enough then, sharing in most of the Greek superstitions with regard to gems, did not deem the opal unlucky.

During the Middle Ages there were not wanting those who shared the Roman weakness for the opal and it entered largely into the adornment of both sexes.

Honest Sweat.

(From The Kansas City Star.)

Some persons of the class that Tennyson called "the oiled and curled Assyrian bulls" object to riding in the street cars with tired working men. Most of these persons are probably senseless "little brothers of the rich," who have none of the broad fellowship and true democracy that all capable men feel, whether they are rich or poor.

Against that servile spirit contrast the fine brotherhood and manhood of these lines of a new poet, Wilfrid Wilson Gibson:

"Snug in my easy chair,
I stirred the fire to flame.

Till dazzled by the drowsy glare,
I shut my eyes to heat and light,
And saw, in sudden night,
Crouched in the dripping dark,
With steaming shoulders stark,
The man that hews the coal to feed my fire."

What care I for trouble makers?
I can reap where I have sown.
I've a patch of ten green acres
And a roof tree all my own.
This the song of all the ages—
First in manhood's ranks shall stand
He who toils for no man's wages.
Owns the soil and rules the land.

PARENTS ARE BLAMED FOR DAUGHTERS' FALL

After relating a revolting tale of a career of vice on the streets and in the suburbs of Atlanta, Dora Rothstein and Corinne Wilson, two girls aged 14 and 18 years, stood unabashed in the recorder's court Saturday afternoon.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston, shocked by their testimony, called for the parents of the prisoners.

Two aged men and a woman stepped forward and stood before the judge. They were Mr. and Mrs. A. Rothstein, parents of the younger girl, and W. B. Engeseer, father of the Wilson girl.

Parents Asked to Explain.

"It is up to you," said the recorder pro tem, "to explain to this court why you have allowed your daughters to lead such shameful lives. It is a disgrace to the home of anyone. These girls are no more than children. And yet they have gone upon the streets. Why?"

Rothstein said that he and his wife had been unable to control the headstrong girl and that although they had striven to raise her righteously their efforts had been in vain. They were powerless, he said, to keep her at home and force her to abide by their orders.

Engesser said that the Wilson girl had married a youth of 20, less than six months ago, and after having been deserted by her husband, turned to a wayward life. He had endeavored to raise her at home, and once went so far as to send her to the House of the Good Shepherd in Cincinnati.

The two girls were arrested a night or so ago upon the request of A. Rothstein, who said she had run away from home. They told Chief Beavers a story of their crimson life that resulted in a number of arrests, two of whom, W. W. Suttles and C. A. Dollar, were tried in police court at the same time as their accusers.

Two Men Implicated.

They also implicated two other men, one of whom is a physician, and both of whom have disappeared. The police have been unable to find them to make the arrests ordered by Chief Beavers. For six days they plied their trade together, having become companions when the Rothstein girl left home this last time.

Without hesitancy both girls told the judge their stories. Twice, they had slept in the open in Ponce de Leon park, the first night near the skating rink and the second in the tennis court. Once they slept near an old mill in Campbell county, where they had gone in a surrey with Dollar and Suttles.

Much of their testimony was unprintable.

J. H. Leavitt, an attorney, connected with the case, told the record pro tem that the home life of the girls was to a large degrees directly responsible. "It can all be traced to the fireside," he said.

Miss Margaret Lang, a well-known settlement worker, offered to install both girls in some house of correction. The Rothstein girl was turned over to the juvenile courts, and the Wilson girl will probably be sent to the House of the Good Shepherd.

Dollar and Suttles were bound over under a charge of furnishing intoxicants to minors, it having developed during the trial that they had given beer to both girls while on the trip to Campbell county.

A new activity was noted in the police vice war Saturday at noon, when policemen swooped down upon the lodging house of Lula Bell at 184 1-2 Peters street, arresting three women, Maud Wilson, Mrs. Lee Berkstein, the Bell woman and one man, L. W. Berkstein.

The prisoners were carried to police headquarters and will be tried Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. All later gave bond.

SPAIN STILL MISSING.

Three Days' Search Fails to Reveal Waycross Man.

Waycross, Ga., July 12.—(Special.) Although a thorough search has been made for three days in the woods about the home of Mack Spain, whose mysterious disappearance has caused his friends to entertain fears of foul play, no trace of the man has been found. Last night the missing man's home was entered and robbed and no clues left by the thieves, beyond tracks that showed that more than one participated in the robbery.

ATHENS ENTERTAINS GEORGIA LEGISLATORS

The legislature suspended active legislation on Saturday, while it went to Athens to make an inspection of the state educational institutions there.

The members of both houses left Atlanta early Saturday morning by special train for the university city, arriving about 10 o'clock in the morning. They were shown the improvements in the university, the agricultural college and the normal school, and were given an idea of the great work that these institutions are doing.

They were entertained royally by the Athens chamber of commerce. The solons returned to Atlanta again Saturday.

(Copyright, 1913, by W. H. Stewart, Jr.)

Motoring Department. The Constitution: The spark plug in one of the cylinders of my car gets out of working order after the motor has been running an hour or so. Soot forms on it quickly, causing the motor to miss fire and skip. The valves have been ground and the compression in the defective cylinder seems to be as good as in any of the others. The other plugs may be used for a month without cleaning. What do you think may cause this trouble?—Motorist.

The cylinder in question is either getting too much oil or is not properly cleared of exhaust gasses. If the rings are not fitted properly the oil will work up through the ring openings and also through the scarce leak of the rings. Inspect the exhaust valve and note whether it has the maximum lift. The clearance between the tappet rod and the valve stem should not be greater than one sixty-fourth inch. The greater this clearance the less lift the valve has, which in turn prevents proper scavenging of the cylinder. There is no reason why one cylinder should carbonize more than another, except that the piston and rings are not properly fitted. In modern oiling systems each cylinder should receive equal lubrication. Sometimes where grease is used in timing gears it will work through the main crankshaft bearing into the forward compartment of the case. When this happens the forward cylinder is usually most affected with carbonization. If the adjustment of the valves does not remedy your trouble, would suggest that you have properly fitted to this cylinder new piston rings.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: My —— car is fitted with overhead valves and operated with a single cam shaft and rocker arm. The dual ignition system is employed. While recently testing the engine I sheared off two of the four bolts that held the connecting rod bearing of the second cylinder on the crankshaft. After replacing these, I adjusted the other bearings and worked them in until the crankshaft turned over with ease. When I started the engine it missed on the second cylinder. I tested the ignition, changed the spark plugs and put in a new high tension wire from the magneto to the cylinder. I then adjusted the rocker arm, ground in both valves, put new copper gaskets around them and put in a new roller at the bottom of the pushrod where it works on the cam shaft. Also tested the compression, which was about the same as on the other cylinders. Still it didn't run. I then put new gaskets in the intake manifold and readjusted the carburetor. The exhaust pipe gets hot if the engine is run for ten minutes or longer, and it also hits on four if raced. When pulling it I went over thirty miles per hour. It seemed to work all right, but under that it missed and labored. I want to say, however, that only a few days ago it ran perfectly all the time, and throttled down to about eighteen miles per hour, but when we completed our trip the exhaust pipe was red hot and the vibrator was steaming and boiling. The next day it missed on the second cylinder again. I am certainly puzzled over this mysterious trouble and should like to know some remedy to overcome it.—C. M. Deegan.

Your trouble undoubtedly lies in the rocker arm adjustments. If these adjustments are not accurate the lead to the intake and exhaust valve is changed, thereby upsetting the functions of this cylinder. Usually there are marks on the flywheel which will help you to determine when the valves should open and when they should close. In overhead valve motors the adjustments to the valves cannot always be according to rule, especially when the motor has been used considerably. We would also that you inspect the valve cages for warpage. If the cages are slightly warped the gaskets will not hold. The overheating would not occur if the valve and spark are timed correctly. An over-rich mixture will cause overheating. Would suggest that you reduce the mixture to as lean a state as possible. If the mixture is right and you know the valves and ignition are timed properly, then you must look to the cooling system. It may be that the radiator needs to be cleaned, or that the hose connections, etc., need replacing.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: Please inform if while starting a car it is better to accelerate the motor before engaging the clutch or to accelerate as the clutch is let in. It seems that the latter method would be less wearing on the clutch facing.—S. D. Rheims.

It is more advisable to accelerate the engine as the clutch is being engaged. Judgment must be used to accelerate the motor sufficiently in order to take care of the load when the clutch is engaged, otherwise the motor will stall. If the motor is speeded up first and then the clutch engaged, the tendency will be to start the car with a jerk.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: While adjusting one of the bearings in one of the rear wheels I had occasion to take a bearing out, and in doing so lost one of the balls. Will it injure the bearing to run without the lost ball?—Amateur.

You should replace the lost ball without delay, taking particular care to obtain the exact size, so that all the balls of the bearing will be the same. If you do not replace the lost ball the additional strain put upon the others may cause the cutting of the ball race. When this starts, the life of the whole bearing will be very short.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: After the engine of my —— car has been running for a little while the carburetor runs dry, but it only does this when I start up the engine the first time in the day. Otherwise, it never gives any trouble on the road, either driving or running idle. The auxiliary tank on the dash remains full and the hole in the cap is quite clear. I have opened the valve that shuts off the gas from the carburetor a little more, but it does not remedy the trouble. I have taken the carburetor, piping and auxiliary apart, but find nothing to stop the gas from flowing. Can you assist me in locating the trouble?—Owner.

Would suggest that you inspect carefully the float valve and pivots of float. Also note whether float sticks. It is possible that overnight corrosion of the parts causes them to stick for a time when first starting. Since your trouble disappears after motor has been running a few minutes, this seems the most probable cause of your trouble.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: I have a two-cylinder touring car of 1909 make. After running a few miles the muffler and the exhaust pipe get red hot beyond the back cylinder, and when once the car is stopped on the road, I cannot start her. The exhaust from the cylinders makes such a noise that it is impossible to hear the horn blow—T. J. Franklin.

Either the exhaust valves or the sparks appear to be timed too late. Were this not so the unburned gases would not be so intensely hot. The burning of the gases should take place within the cylinder, the exhaust simply being the exit of waste products of combustion. With a constant flame passing through the exhaust valves they will pit and warp beyond use. The loud noise you speak of is a natural result of late timing. It is possible that your trouble simply lies in the spark. Would advise your inspection of this first.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: Is there any advantage in putting lubricating oil in the gasoline? Are any motor car engines so lubricated?—S. D. Friend.

There are a number of cases where lubricating oil is used in the gasoline and in this manner fed to the cylinder. There are no particular advantages to this system. However, in cases where two cycle motors are used it is necessary and advisable.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: Can a vibrating coil be used in place of a non-vibrating coil, and if so, how can it be done.—W. L. M.

It is not practical to use an ordinary vibrating coil in place of a non-vibrating coil. The usual vibrating unit is used in connection with a battery. The non-vibrating type is used with magneto. In the latter case the current generated is much greater, hence coil capacity must be much greater. Again, the construction of the coils differ. The function of the vibrator is to automatically interrupt or make and break the primary circuit to help induce the desired high voltage secondary current. Where the magneto and non-vibrating coil is used the interrupter or circuit breaker of the magneto accomplishes the make and break of the primary, and accordingly eliminates the use of the coil vibrator.

It will also be found that the condenser connections are different in the two coils. In the vibrating coil no condenser connections appear, since the terminals are within and across the vibrator. In the non-vibrating coil one condenser terminal appears outside. This must be attached across the breaker in such a way that the condenser action may be utilized. Even though the vibrator may be cut out on the vibrating coil, and the desired condenser and other connections made, it is not advisable or practical to overload a coil which in no way was designed for the work. The coil would undoubtedly be ruined very quickly.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: Please give me some information as to how the exhaust valve of my motor should be timed. The cam shaft gear broke and I do not understand how to get the gear back in place. I understand that it must work with the intake valve, which is on the other side of the cylinder. How should the gear be set?—R. Forgeson.

The exhaust valve should open about forty degrees before bottom center and close about ten degrees past top center. The flywheel of the motor is usually marked to indicate when exhaust valve should begin to open. Determine the firing stroke of number one cylinder, and when piston is about three-quarters down note the flywheel mark. There is usually a pointer to guide. When pointer is opposite mark, the No. 1 cam of the cam shaft should be about to raise valve lifter. In this position the gear should be engaged in mesh. Should there be no marks on the flywheel to guide you it will be necessary to chalk mark, or otherwise subdivide the wheel. Bear in mind that the lead to valves differs on different motors, depending upon the design of c. p. m. The forty-degree lead mentioned is approximately correct, but to be accurate would suggest that you obtain this information correctly from the manufacturer of the motor.

Motoring Department, The Constitution: I have a four-cylinder 35-horsepower car of this year's model which has suddenly developed a peculiar missing. The car is equipped with a magneto and misses on cylinders 2 and 3 at all speeds, and hits as well as ever on cylinders 1 and 4. There is no spark at 2 and 3 whatever, while 1 and 4 have a strong spark. The wires are in good shape, also the plugs. What is the remedy for this trouble?—Frank S. Murray.

The trouble, it appears, lies in the primary interrupter in the magneto. One of the cams which operate this without doubt, is worn or defective and does not cause the interrupter points to open. There are two cams operating the interrupter which work alternately. The firing order of your engine is either 1-2-3-4 or 1-3-4-2, and it is evident that one cam operates for the spark in 1 and 4 cylinders and the other cam for the 2 and 3 cylinders. The trouble may be located by removing the magneto and revolving the armature slowly by hand, watch the interrupter points to see if they separate properly every half revolution of the armature shaft.

HIGH GRADE OF TIRES FURNISHED FOR SOUTH

Herbert Starnes, manager of the New South Rubber company, which has the exclusive sale in southern states for the well-known brand of G. and J. tires, in an interview yesterday had the following to say about his company and the G. and J. tires:

"The New South Rubber company is making an earnest and we might add a highly successful effort to give to the southern trade not only a high grade of tire, but also the very best service that any tire and accessory house can give. Rarely has a company experienced such marked success as has this one since it opened business some fifteen months ago. The high character of the products we handle we believe sufficient to merit the generous patronage on the part of the southern trade.

"This company gives the dealers of the south an excellent opportunity to secure close at hand a brand of tires that has a country-wide reputation for high quality, coupled with quick service and prompt deliveries.

"Men and tires are a good deal alike. They all look a good deal alike and act a good deal alike when it's fine weather and 'smooth going.' It takes a difficult task or a bit of hard service to pick out the weak ones. They generally blow up.

"He is a wise man who picks either men or tires which come from good stock and have records of good service behind them. It means dollars in his pocket to do so. G. and J. tires come from the 'pioneer stock' of the pneumatic tire industry of America."

NO OFFER MADE DOBBS BY ST. LOUIS BROWNS

Montgomery Manager Says He Doesn't Know How the Rumor Originated.

Birmingham, Ala., July 12.—Manager Dobbs stated emphatically here Wednesday that he had received no offer from the St. Louis Browns to manage the club next year.

"I have never been approached," said Dobbs, "in reference to managing the Browns, and consequently have never received an offer. The meeting with Branch Rickey will probably be in reference to some of the Montgomery players. I do not understand how the rumor was circulated."

CADILLAC MODELS FOR 1914 ARE BEING EAGERLY AWAITED

The automobile world, always susceptible to changes and innovations, has been put on tenter hooks by the preliminary announcement of the Cadillac Motor Car company referring to certain progressive developments which will distinguish the 1914 Cadillac, the exact nature of which will soon be revealed.

Those active in the industry, and laymen as well, are always keenly curious about contemplated motor car improvements and what they portend, but this interest is whetted to its keenest edge when the Cadillac announces a new series because of the position the company occupies in the history and development of the motor car. The reason is obvious; conservatism has been coupled with foresightedness. Henry M. Leland, advisory manager of the Cadillac, the founder and guiding spirit of the concern, is an extremely conservative man with half a century of experience in the mechanical world, yet he has been called the "youngest" man in the automobile industry today.

In the affairs of the Cadillac there has been a wholesome fear of the whims of the fadist and the merely temperamental innovations. But the company, nevertheless, has from time to time played the role of pioneer and has inaugurated several important epochs in the development of the motor car. One of these epochs illustrates in an especially significant manner the reason for the public's attitude toward this company. It was two years ago that the Cadillac had the honor of being first to introduce an automatic electrical cranking and lighting system. It was a revolution in efficiency and comfort. As there have been many other progressive features first developed in this car, the query is now naturally voiced each year:

"What will the Cadillac do?"

The Cadillac company's conservatism has not permitted it to make rash promises. Therefore, when it declares that it is about to inaugurate another new and progressive development, the automobile world, remembering past performances, is on the qui vive to know just what these statements purtend.

Aside from these there were only a few scattering loads of mixed butcher grass cattle. These were not good killers, but for the season of the short supply sold high, the buyer getting the worse of the bargain.

The Political Rights of Women

MRS. MARY L. McLENDON, Editor
President Georgia Woman's Suffrage Association

The question what will women do with the vote when they get it, is being answered now in the ten states where women have been given the right. Ninety per cent of the women in California who registered this year voted. Sixty-four per cent of the men voters registered.

The California legislature adjourned about the first week in June. It was the first to meet since women got the ballot, and produced more advanced legislation desired by women than all the legislatures put together in the past sixty years. A partial list of the achievement includes:

The Mother's Pension Law, granting aid to needy parents in order to keep the children at home rather than committed to institutions. The Health Certificate Law; the Minimum Wage Law; the Red Light Abatement and Injunction Law; the Joint Guardianship Law, giving mothers equal rights over their minor children; the Juvenile Court Law; the extension of the Eight-Hour Law for Women; the Age-of-Consent Law, raising the age from 16 to 21; the State Training School for Girls; the Teacher's Pension Law, granting pension of $500 a year to all teachers who have been in service thirty years; the Net Container Law; the Weights and Measures Law, the Roberts' bill forbidding the destruction of food stuff, fit for human consumption, to keep the price up; the State Civil Service Law; the White Slave Law; the Tuberculosis Law; Amendment to the Liquor Laws, forbidding the sale of liquor between 7 and 8 a. m.; the creation of a commission to investigate the question of old-age pensions; the Workman's Compensation Law; the Water Conservation Law, establishing a water commission over all water in California; the Psychopathic Parole Law; the Bill Board Law; the Bastardy Law, and a law for the sterilization of inmates of insane asylums and certain convicts; the creation of mosquito control districts; the requirement of the wife's signature to legalize the assignment of a man's wages; the amendment to the Child Labor Law, raising the age limit of child workers from twelve to fifteen; the 1913 pretty good showing of what equal rights has done for all the people in California.

Work in the Kansas Women.

Kansas women have also proved that they can do things with their ballots. She is one of sixteen states to make mothers joint guardians with the fathers of their own children. She has a splendid white slave law, and women work only eight or nine hours a day. She has a minimum wage bill and a teachers' civil service bill will be passed in the near future. Mothers are pensioned and fathers, deserting their wives and children, can be put to work and their earnings applied to the support of their families. The age of consent is eighteen years. In Georgia it is ten years, but "Bob" Hutchinson will see that it is changed this year or know the reason why. The girlhood of this state must be protected by law as it is in every state where women can vote.

What Women Want.

Dr. John E. White, pastor of the Second Baptist church of Atlanta, has a fair conception of what women want. He says in part: "When the opportunity of the ballot is accorded to women, as it will be, the main object of their movement will be in process of achievement. What women really desire is the removal of the arbitrary fixedness of woman's sphere.

"The protest is not against the unkindness of man, but against the assumption that she is ordained to be a creature of patronage. It is not against a rough and cruel boss she revolts, but against the idea of having a boss at all."

From Jane Addams.

Jane Addams says: "Whether or not the voters in a community exercise themselves in favor of equal suffrage cannot impede its progress. The future historian will merely be able to read whether or not the voters in that city or state were, at a given moment, sensitive to the democratic movement of their time or indifferent to it. The forward progress of the world is a steam roller, which only the blind are willing to oppose."

Methodist Women Want Equal Rights.

Lutheran leagues are forming throughout Methodism in the entire south, led by Miss Belle Bennett, of Kentucky. Of 354 missionaries in the foreign field, 247 are women, and they constitute the main teaching force of the Methodist Episcopal church. The official newspaper asks "if it is just that a part of a church which does the greater portion of its work, and should it be denied a voice in its plans and management?" Let us not forget that three-fourths of church members and more than three-fourths of the prisoners are men. Only 5 per cent are women. Men make the laws and are the most persistent in breaking them. Many members in the missionary societies resitive because of the rules adopted by the men combining the women's home and foreign mission societies and the submission of many questions affecting administration of women's missionary work, composed wholly of men. Mrs. W. F. Tenary, Mrs. J. H. McEachern, Mrs. R. P. Milan and Mrs. R. K. Rambo, all of Atlanta, are on record as wanting and demanding lay rights in the Methodist Episcopal church, south. These women say: "The women do most of the work and therefore they should have representation on the general laity boards of the conference. That the present representation in the general council is more a matter of courtesy than anything else. The question is similar in many respects to the equal suffrage movement; in other words, it is a case of 'taxation without representation.'"

The Work of Frances Willard.

Frances E. Willard, the honored citizen of the state of Illinois, said: "I used to take my little tin dinner pail, as of old, in district school days, and go over to the Illinois statehouse every morning, some kind ladies being there with their sewing to stay with me, and we thus kept house for two weeks. The state geologist let us fix up his room with flowers and birds and pretty home devices. This is what she was 'lobbying' for—the right of women lawfully to vote. I be privileged to take part in the same manner as men when voting on the question of license." This petition, says Miss Willard in a foot note in her book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," "was sealed and placed in the rooms of the Chicago Historical society, not to appear until the day of jubilee, when women vote in Illinois July 2, 1913. The Atlanta Constitution informs us that the 2,000 women, representing a score or more societies active in obtaining the passage of a woman's suffrage bill, paraded Michigan avenue in gaily decorated automobiles. The bill granting equal suffrage to women for all statutory offices became a law on the 1st of July, 1913. Frances Willard lobbied and she died respected and loved by all, and her statue stands in the Hall of Fame at Washington, D. C., next to George Washington. "Don't be ashamed to go to your own statehouse, for you and your forbears helped to build it."

Woman's Citizenship Statistics.

If the right of the male citizen to vote is at present determined by standards quite insistent with our naturalization laws, the right of the female citizens to vote may be said to be determined by practically no standards at all. Under the present laws the naturalization of women follows that of husband and father. Resident American women may therefore be deprived of their vote. "Upon marriage to an alien, foreign-born women and even most recently arrived immigrant women may be immediately enfranchised by marriage to a citizen. Following this enfranchisement, her citizenship is retained even though she is divorced, if she continues to reside in the United States.

There are 5,000,000 foreign-born adult females in the United States. Three of the leading immigrant states are woman suffrage states, and the foreign-born women are becoming a power in the land and are to be counted in all elections as such, for good or for ill, to our republican institutions. While in these states the statistician states the women "the brow-beat part of creation," chivalrous Georgians declare have no citizenship worth speaking of. Their citizenship follows that of husband and father, and is quite inconsistent with the political and legal status of women in other states of the United States. How unfair to the nation-born American women who are still chased with the disfranchised lunatic, idiot, criminal and foreigner in the ten states and one territory where women vote on equal terms with men?

How New York Women Are Protected.

The industrial board of the New York labor commission after a conference with representatives of seventy-five canning factories, has adopted resolutions advancing the maximum number of hours a week that women may work under certain conditions. Under the new rule "women of 18 years of age and over may be employed in canning factories between June 25 and August 5, 1913, not more than sixty-six hours in any day, or sixty hours in any one week, but not in excess of twelve hours in any one day or seventy-six hours in any one week or six days." In 1915 a constitutional amendment will be voted on by the men people of the state of New York, and it is hoped that the grand commonwealth a weapon—the ballot—which will assist them in protecting themselves.

Georgia Women Organize.

The DeKalb County Equal Suffrage association was organized by the state president last week with Mrs. Susan E. Cunningham, of Decatur, Ga., president. Great things are expected of this suffrage association, as Mrs. Cunningham was the vice president of the Alabama suffrage association. The first meeting will be held in her home on McDonald street Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Agitate, educate, organize is the slogan of the woman suffragists of Georgia.

Madame Bczena Vikova-Kuneticka is well known to the parliament of Bohemia after a campaign in which she was helped not only by women but by the men of the progressive radical and national socialist parties and a portion of the liberals. She has, however, never taken a seat in parliament, there having ben no session since her election. None is likely soon, because the German members, although a small m'nority, shout, scream, stamp, pound on the desk and keep up such a noise that no business can be transacted, so in five years there have been only three sessions of twelve days each.

Washington, July 12.—Rain in the fourth or fifth inning of the congressional baseball game here this afternoon at American league park was the only thing that stopped the democrats from piling up the republicans worse than 29 to 4. All efforts of the republicans, who were helped out by a few democrats, were unavailing to stop the hard hitting democrats. The curves of Representative Webb, of North Carolina, could not be solved by the republicans, while the democrats had no trouble in finding the delivery of Representative Patton, of Pennsylvania, who appeared unable to obtain unanimous consent to get a strike across the plate.

One of the features of the game was the return of Samuel Winslow, of Massachusetts, who played on a Harvard team back in the eighties and had not played since until today. He was the real star of the game and made a hit every time at the bat. But he could not run. His girth would not permit of such activity and he impressed a house messenger into service, with the consent of all parties.

In the third inning the Democrats made sixteen runs.

Victor Murdock, of Kansas, the progressive leader, who was to have umpired, failed to appear. The game was played by the members of the two political parties for the benefit of the Washington Playgrounds' association.

The Republican team, with its drafted Democrats, was: Delegate J. Kalaninacle, of Hawaii, second base; Representatives Charles E. Patton, of Pennsylvania, pitcher; Clarence B. Miller, of Minnesota, catcher; S. P. Winslow, of Massachusetts, first base; H. Reed, of New Hampshire, (democrat), third base; Bird S. McGuire, of Oklahoma, right field; Lewis L. Morgan, of Louisiana (democrat), center field; Richard W. Austin, of Tennessee, left field; Thomas Stout, of Montana (democrat), shortstop.

The Old Time Fan Found Here, There and Everywhere; Also Some Gossip of the Ring

By Charles A. Lamar.

The race in the Southern league is a warm proposition at the present stage of the melee, and Mr. B. Smith and his perspiring pals are working like truck horses to slip over a half Nelson before the other folks see it coming.

They have the stuff, all right. Let us hope that they can manipulate the reverse double cross and fetch home the bacon.

As a rule, that man Frank, of New Orleans, is big league timber all the way, and powerful hard to do. But this season he has been too busy gathering the bale in large bundles to interfere with the scheme concocted by the other fellows to get his goat, so his pets, the Pels, were bilked to the bone yard before he could wake up. But does he worry? Not so that you would notice it.

The League Dictator.

He has dominated the league many years. As a dictator and pre-eminent specialist in the politics of baseball, he has a grip that's got Frank Gotch's famous "one-hold" slikinz down the dark flues. The soap suds running down a sink hole.

You can cinch that between the eyes and with out under-reefed sails. Take it fro innie. You can't keep a good man down. As Mr. Dooley would say, "You can't even get him down."

If professional ball should melt off the map, like a snowball in a furnace, some of the "baseball experts" who have fattened on the politics of the game, would have to go to work or trail a free lunch route and maltreat the cracker bowls with one paw and take a hand full out of the water pail per with the other, in order to get acquainted with the real Specialism is all right in a way. But too much is an element sufficiency.

Syndicate Blusher.

Referring again to the baseball syndicates conducted by space men for gain, Tom Daley, who played second for Brooklyn in the '90's, was induced to dictate some flamboyant club-strap on "How to Play Second Base."

And, oddly enough, "second base" was not mentioned, except in the head. That's what I call using the real stuff. It is only fair to say that the "syndicates" of today can beat that, but not much.

Well, it's a chance, the Ejench-Canadian, then playing first for Brooklyn, after realizing it, said to Daley:

"Listen, my big stiff, you've wasted a firkin of printer's ink trying to tell other people how to play second and forgot to mention the bag. Now, listen, don't that junk or you'll be selling shoelaces on the corner in a couple of weeks." And Tom got wise.

So don't forget to chop the bunk.

And try playing ball instead.

For if you don't you often will Remember what I said.

Athletics Breezing.

Cornelius McGillinddy and his powerful Athletics are breezing through the American league like a blizzard in Alaska. They are the "class" of both leagues by a good many kilometers.

Mack himself is a wonder and the sage of the pastiming business. He acts on his own judgment and keeps his own dope sheets. And so far as baseball is concerned, he keeps his own tongue, too. Trying to interfere him is much like shoving hands with a buzz saw, only no exhibition. Take a chance and see where you get off.

In 1887 he was with the Washingtons and although a mere youngster, he held the starting pitch side honors of Hank O'Day without turning an eyelash or uttering a word. He never opened his mouth, but O'Day was scrapping all the time with inimitable wit and humor. And say, that was some battery, believe me.

The Clan of Mack.

Come all ye phony sluggers with your belfries full of cracks,
You haven't got a chance to beat that team of Connie Mack's;
It's the wagon for the Senators, the Clevelands and the Sox,

Some Boxing Dope.

Ritchie's victory, by complete victory over Rivers was refreshing to those who admire a courageous man, no matter what his avocation in life may be. Ritchie is a man and a real champion.

The outstanding features of his work were his undoubted skill as a boxer, his admirable poise and superb confidence in his own powers.

Rivers started out as a lion, but after the sixth round he looked like a stage villain out of a job and up against it.

Then Ritchie got to him it brought out the yellow good and strong, because, although he had some skill and stamina, he had no heart and that's the answer. In short, Mr. Rivers has a yellow streak as wide as Marietta street.

Old Bill Naughton, in referring to Rivers, rolled as a sweet morsel under his tongue the phrase, "Son of the southland." What southland? Rivers is no more a native of the south than he is of Belfast, in Ireland.

But it would be a small tribute to common decency to deport him to Alaska and compel him to fight Joe for a living the balance of his natural life.

Rivers a False Alarm.

Of all the rough neck counterfeits who have bobbed around the ring for forty years and separated them from their coin—the main business in hand—this Rivers person heads the list in the rock-to-boom.

Mr. "Bud" Anderson had only a long chance in his go with Leach Cross, and while he was to land one of his trip-hammer blows, for which he is famous. But against as crafty and experienced a fighter as the New York dentist that was a remote possibility and failed to materialize and there you are.

Yet Cross' triumph was incisive and he deserves whatever credit may be coming to him, but my own opinion is that the dope sheets have him very much overrated.

Anderson, with proper handling and development, Anderson should come through. He is young and game to the core and when the Cross-maker wallop lands it is a through ticket to the land of Nod. That's all.

Dr. Cross says he wants to hook up with Ritchie he says he prefers "plenty of action." Well, the "doc" needn't let that worry him. If Rit-hie takes him on, he'll get his wish, all right.

And what's more, we think the tussle is over the "doc" will need "plenty" of it, you can lay your bank roll on this view of Dr. J. Cross.

Mr. Battling Nelson says that his marvelous endurance was due to a slow beating heart. Maybe so. But if what Mr. Nelson doesn't know about any kind of a heart were collected and pointed it would make quite a large book.

The consensus of opinion entertained by the experts is that his endurance was due to a constitution akin to that of a Georgia mule and a little like that of a Florida alligator. They never thought that he had a heart at all. Great is the jungle-nut of the commodity called bunkarino.

News Wise and Otherwise Of Boys Who Put 'Em Over

Detroit, Mich., July 12—To handle the tremendous financial business of the Ford motor company and sales company organized in August, 1909, and today it is one of the most prosperous banking institutions in the country.

It has no direct connection, of course, with the Ford company, but James Couzens, general manager of the Ford company, is president. Mr. Ford is a stockholder and other people interested in the Ford company have an interest in the bank.

Its business is not confined to the Ford company, as Highland Park, a suburb of Detroit, in which the Ford plant is located, has had a tremendous growth in the past few years and is a live, prosperous city of between 30,000 and 50,000 people. It is in reality a part of Detroit, adjoining that city and getting fire protection, water and lighting service from Detroit although it has never been formally annexed.

The bank is known as the Highland Park State bank and, according to its statement of June 24, it has resources of $3,019,787.26, with deposits, both commercial and savings, of $2,710,-365.15.

Ellis, Kan., July 8-9, 1913—The Indians to the Pacific coast I. A. M. A. tour reached here tonight. Everyone pretty well exhausted. Temperature, 112 in the shade. Makes us feel like taking off our skins and riding around in our bones. Enthusiastic welcome everywhere. Royally entertained at Salina. Guests of Col. Wellington Ellsworth, Kan., at luncheon. Great enthusiasm at subsequent good roads meeting. Fake story relative to origin of "skidoo" involving horseless carriage published at "Lays successfully controverted by Elwood Haynes, father of the American automobile industry, who spoke before villagers and was cheered to the echo. Writer introduced by governor of Kansas to large audience here tonight and spoke. Camping in park tonight. Haynes cars continue to demonstrate their wonderful endurance. Everybody well and happy.

R. CRAWFORD.

Official Representative on Tour.

M. Nabors, Alco manager, returned from Birmingham yesterday and reported another Alco victory in the sale of two Alco trucks and the assignment of the state of Alabama to the Brown Motor Car company as Alco agents. Mr. Nabors said that Birmingham is a most promising field for motor trucks, and says that with the Brown Motor Car company as agents the Alcos will get their portion of the business.

"The American underslung sixes came into Ellis without a splutter, though the day's run was over 180 miles of typical Kansas gumbo. The thermometer showed 112 degrees in the shade and nearly 125 in the sun all day, and at times the gale was fifty miles an hour. Hot winds added to the discomforts and hardship of the ride, but we came through with colors flying."

The above telegram was received by the American Motors company, of Indianapolis, from E. J. Lewis, a newspaper man and its special representative in the Indianapolis-Pacific coast tour, when the Hoosier cavalcade reached Ellis Kan. The American underslungs have been acting nobly thus far on the tour, though the trip is said to be proving an extremely trying one for the cars. The tourists indulged in considerable worry, before the start, because of the highways of Kansas. The soil in many sections of that state is particularly difficult of navigation in wet weather and there were many doubts expressed as to the ability of all the cars to negotiate the famous gumbo.

HEALY BUILDING STRIKE MAY END ON MONDAY

Neither C. Harrison Barnes, president of the executive board of the Building Trades council, who directed the unionized workmen on the Healy building to walk out Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, because of the employment of non-union men by the contractor, nor R. M. Walker, the general contractor on the building, would talk for publication on the matter, except those directly interested in the strike yesterday.

But during the morning there were two or three brief conferences between the parties interested, but no agreement was reached and nothing was done by either party during the afternoon, as the men would not have returned for the balance of the day had adjustment been reached. Among the employees who came out at President Barnes' direction, it was generally believed that a settlement will be reached not later than Monday forenoon.

RUNAWAY BOY CAUGHT; GIVES POLICE A CHASE

Roy Mortenson, the 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Mortenson, of 58 West Peachtree, ran away from home last night. His parents phoned police headquarters to search for the boy, and he was seen by Officers Cochran and Milan on Peachtree street near the Georgian Terrace, but it was not until after they had chased him for several blocks that they finally caught him. The boy gave no reason for running away from home.

MORPHINE WAS GIVEN CRAWFORD AS MEDICINE

Warrant Declared Illegal.

Goes to Cartersville.

Later in the afternoon Attorney Smith declared that his client had gone to Cartersville, and this was also the declaration of John Bennett, her son-in-law, who lives with her. Mr. Bennett asserted that she will say that Mrs. Crawford would return late Saturday night or early Sunday.

When Mrs. Crawford returns she will be placed under arrest, for the murder warrant and will have to have a hearing before a superior court judge before she can be allowed her freedom. It is expected that she will possibly remain in Cartersville until Monday and then return for the hearing and give bond.

The Crawford kinsmen, who are fighting her, declare that she gave her aged husband morphine and caused his death. They declare that she married him in order that she might the sooner be free to enjoy his wealth.

In an effort to prove this charge they had the body of Mr. Crawford exhumed on June 12 and a post-mortem examination of his stomach made by Dr. H. F. Harris, of the state board of health. Dr. Harris testified that he found traces of morphine and also of mercuric acid in the stomach and that the man did not come to his death from pneumonia, as was declared in the death certificate.

Doctor Prescribed Morphine.

Dr. J. W. Hurt, who attended Mr. Crawford in his last days, stated Saturday night that he had been called in about a week before Mr. Crawford died.

"I gave him morphine to alleviate his suffering," he testified, "and have also gave him a cough mixture that will well account for the presence of the mercuric acid. I have never testified anything else."

"I am not surprised to hear that Dr. Harris reported finding traces of morphine in the stomach. I am surprised to see that he says that the man did not die of pneumonia. I treated him and signed the death certificate. The evidence that Mrs. Crawford poisoned him is entirely groundless."

Mrs. Crawford Accused.

"Mrs. Crawford is certainly guilty," declared Charles Crawford, who swore out the warrant, and who made his formal signature by making a cross-mark where the bailiff wrote his name to the warrant. The accuser declared that he could produce the sworn testimony of Dr. J. Cross, of Atlanta, who attended the late Mr. Crawford, that he had given him no morphine, opium or other narcotic drugs.

"Here is a copy of the testimony taken by the court stenographer, and in it Dr. Harris swears that Mrs. Crawford poisoned him," declared Attorney J. S. James, representing the Crawford litigants, who have now turned their cases into the civil to the criminal branch of the courts.

Statements in Conflict.

The case, which has taken such a surprising turn, is a long and bitter fight in court. At present evidence is being taken before James Anderson, appointed by Judge Pendleton to take the evidence and report his finding to a judge of the superior court.

The entire affair centers around some of the most valuable north side property in Atlanta, which Mr. Crawford left at his death.

Joshua B. Crawford, or "Josh" Crawford as everybody knew him in the days when both were residents of Peachtree and Tenth streets was known as "Tish tSqueeze," came to Atlanta some forty years ago, leaving his farm near Acworth, Cobb county when he was a man of 30.

He had some money and so had his first wife, Mrs. Nancy Crawford, and they invested in property on West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets when it was worth a few dollars an acre and was valuable only for a small truck farm.

The years rolled by and the aged couple held their property and lived in the simple fashion of people of their station in life. They had no idea of the enormous future value of their land, and while they were land owners, they were regarded as poor people.

About six years ago Mrs. Nancy Crawford died. She and her husband had made similar wills by which they divided their property among certain of their relatives. Even then the estate was not half as valuable as it is today.

Wedding He Lived Simply.

When he was left a widower Josh Crawford continued to live in the little cottage on West Peachtree street where his second wife lives now. With him lived H. G. Crawford, a grandnephew, and Mrs. Rosie Jones, a grand-niece. The old man, who was 78 year of age at his death in 1909, lived as simply as ever.

H. G. or "Hints" Crawford, swore during the hearing that all three of them lived on $15 per week," declared Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford.

Probably a good deal amount of money the old man ever paid out at one time in his life was expended when he took a trip to Jacksonville in February, 1908. When he went there it was to alleviate the constant pain of a hacking cough, from which no drugs or physicians relieved him. In Jacksonville he bought a modest boarding place and decided to spend his time there, hoping that the soft air would help to bring ease to his throat and lungs.

It was in this house that he met the woman whom he married and who is today branded as his murderess. Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford was Mrs. Mary Belle Bishop then and she had gone to Florida after leaving Pittsburg Pa., where she went from her childhood home in Farmington, Pa.

Tells of Her Marriage.

Mrs. Crawford, today accused of poisoning the old man in order that she might become free to enjoy his wealth, tells best the story of that meeting and the consequent marriage.

"I was running a boarding house in Jacksonville," she started out calmly, "and Mr. Crawford came there one day and asked in a feeble voice if he could secure a room. He was a man who looked even older than his 75 years and who seemed to be in physical distress.

"Despite his condition, there was something of the rugged strength of the man of the country in his body and manner and I remember that even that day I felt an appeal go out to him. He seemed to need aid, physical aid; he ought then to have had some one to take his arm as he came up the steps.

"But nothing like that came across me then. I was just a widow, running a boarding house and making a good living, and that was all. The old man was to me another roomer and boarder; one who would aid me in my struggle for a livelihood.

"I learned that he could pay for his meals and lodging and I took him in. Then after a few days we became better acquainted. He was too feeble to go away from the house much, but appeared to want someone to talk to him. I was the only one there most of the day and naturally I was the one whom he sought out and talked to.

"One day he paid me a compliment; not in the gentle language of a man of the world; not about my appearance or dress, but simply about the most homely and yet most necessary thing in the world.

"'Mrs. Bishop,' he said, 'you are the best cook in the whole world and you don't know it, but your cooking is doing me more good than all the Florida air and all the doctor's drugs I am gettin'.'

"I learned afterwards that he had lived on bread and existed mainly on sardines and crackers and such canned goods as might be purchased most cheaply, and while I did not furnish a table that was the equal of the top-priced tourist hotels, I did furnish a wholesome meal and I got so that I loved to watch the old man eat.

"Finally, one day after we had talked about generalities and he had drifted back to his younger days and the things he had had led, he arose, put out and asked me if I would not marry him. He said he wanted someone to take care of him and that he thought I was the most lovable and most able woman he knew.

Tender in Courtship.

Here her voice broke and she paused to recover.

"And," she continued, in the same calm tone in which she has always discussed her case, "and I admired him; he was a gentleman, a thorough gentleman. His years have been spent without some of the graces of modern day manners, but I admired and respected his ruggedness and straightforward manner and his old-time simplicity.

"Well, I loved the old man, something like the love that grows from a woman's desire to cherish and protect the feeble, and combining with a feeling of respect and admiration for him, and he when he contnitued and I saw that he was in earnest I consented to wed him.

"We were married in Jacksonville. They have even questioned and actually attacked the validity of our marriage," she injected into her story with a note of herself and her aged and wealthy husband.

"Soon after that he became seized with a desire to return home. He declared that he did not need the Florida climate, that he had found what he did need and that was someone to care for him.

"We came here and started housekeeping in the little cottage. I set about and spent money on the place and made it more homelike and comfortable than he had ever known it and I put things on the table that he needed.

"It was then that we had a severe spell of weather; something like the winters of Pittsburg. It did not bother me, for I was strong and leaned and used to a more rigorous climate, but he caught another cold in his lungs and lay in bed. It was in the middle of March and he was relieved and it was about March 27 that he died.

"I tended him and Dr. Hurt was called. He came then during the last three days we had a trained nurse. I gave him very little medicine. I think it was only once that I gave him any and then there was another person present then.

Relatives Visited Her.

"Mr. Crawford's relatives had visited the house, but they never treated him with any show of love, although they made no attack on me and there was no embarrassment about his second marriage.

"Later that summer these relatives, Charlie Crawford and the others who are fighting me, came there and lived at my table. They also came in the afternoon and because they were Mr. Crawford's relatives I always had something nice for them.

"I gave them ice cream and cake and they ate it. They weren't afraid to eat what I prepared and there was nothing said about trying to break his will or get his property.

"That all came later. Mr. Crawford had owned about 60 per cent of his estate, and his first wife had owned the remainder, and he had left it will directing how this should go. The only one of those now fighting me is Charlie Crawford, who was to have got about one-sixth of the estate.

"My lawyers settled things up and gave more in many instances than they were required to do. They gave Mrs. Jones, the grand niece, $4,000, when the will left her only $2,000.

"Charlie Crawford agreed to the settlement by which he got his share, and later, some of his relatives came around him and made him repudiate his agreement and declare that his lawyer had acted without his authority, and that he did not want the money.

"Things drifted on and then came the filing of the suit against me last fall when they made the charge that I had caused the death of my husband. Why didn't they do that when he first died? Why didn't they have me arrested last fall when they swore to this statement?

"Of course I deny the whole charge; it's just one thing piled on another and I have spend my money in lawyers fees and to humiliate me and hound me because they want more than their share of the estate and me."

The widow gave this account of her meeting and marrying the wealthy Atlantan when she was sitting in her home Saturday morning. It was before she had gone to court, and before the local warrant had been sworn out.

Grandchild Near.

Viola Belle Bennett, a grandchild, sat in a chair by her and alternately smiled at the newspaper man and patted on the knee of her grandmother. The little girl thought that it must be something mighty important that her grandmother was talking about, and when she was asked to pose for a picture she did it without any show of reluctance. She knows nothing of the charges.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Bennett live with Mrs. Crawford. Mrs. Bennett is her daughter and is the mother of little Viola Belle. John Cox, another son-in-law, makes his home there also. The house in which they live has changed little since its original owner's death and his enarged picture hangs in the principal place in the parlor.

Mrs. Crawford still wears the black that she put on when Mr. Crawford died. There is no particular assumption at mourning effect in her costume and yet one looks at her a second time in the black dress. She is a woman of perhaps 50 years and remarkably well preserved and youthful looking.

Except when she fondles the little granddaughter no one would take her to be a grandparent.

She came into court Saturday morning attired in a simple black silk dress, with white collar, tie wrist and wearing a black straw hat, set off by ribbons of like shade. The costume was not costly looking and yet it showed that it had been well made and that a woman of refinement had selected it.

Even beneath the dark hat Mrs. Crawford looks forth with a pair of dark brown eyes, those that go with hair that is so dark in character that it is taken for black. Her eyes are kindly and there is a softness to them. Yet there is a certain character about them that is determined.

No shifty eyes of a murderess show forth from her face and there are none of the hard lines on her face of a life that would have led up to a crime so abhorrent that one turns aghast at the charge. Just a plain, well dressed woman whose husband is dead and who still wears black, not as mourning, but out of respect to his memory after the time of mourning has passed by the description given after a casual glance at her.

CRAWFORD INQUEST ILLEGAL, SAYS SMITH

"The entire affair, the exhumation of Joshua Crawford's body, the dissecting of the body and the inquest were in direct violation of the law, and should we care to push it, the parties responsible could be dealt with," declared Attorney Burton Smith yesterday in regard to the means which brought about the warrant from Carrollton, charging Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford with poisoning her husband.

"The law prescribes certain ways by which a coroner may be given the right to exhume a body, but there was no authority in this case for Coroner C. W. Baskin to do this, despite the order obtained from Judge James Beall," he added.

Mrs. Crawford Not Notified.

"No notification was given to Mrs. Crawford of the move and none of her witnesses were there to make a statement, and the entire affair was illegal. The declaration of Judge John T. Pendleton and Justice Don K. Johnston that the warrant issued in Carroll county and sent here was not a sufficient ground upon which to hold Mrs. Crawford shows part of the affair illegal."

Attorney Joseph S. James, who represents the prosecution in the criminal case and the plaintiffs in the civil action, defends the steps taken, and declares that he can bring the Georgia code to prove his assertions.

James Defends Steps Taken.

He made the following statement:

"According to the criminal code of Georgia, section 1257, a coroner can make an inquest over a body in his respective county on the following conditions: First, in all cases of sudden and violent death; second, sudden death in prison; third, dead bodies found in their counties; fourth, whenever ordered by a court having criminal jurisdiction.

"Judge James Beall, of the city court of Carrollton, has criminal jurisdiction over all Carroll county. He ordered the coroner to hold an inquest over the body of J. B. Crawford.

"Then after he ordered the coroner, he swore the jury according to law. He swore all the witnesses before the coroner's jury and examined them and the jury found their verdict. Every legal step was taken before the coroner's jury.

"As a matter of law it is untrue that any other county had legal jurisdiction over J. B. Crawford's body except the coroner of Carroll county. The slightest investigation will convince any court or lawyer of the fact that the coroner of Fulton county or the jury of Fulton county would have no legal jurisdiction over a dead body in Carroll county."

MAT McGRATH—
World's Champion Hammer Thrower

TWO YEARS of persistent practice enabled Matt McGrath, New York's "Giant Cop", to lift the laurel that had long rested upon John Flanagan's bronzed brow.

At the Galway Men's games at Celtic Park, New York, October 28, 1911, McGrath smashed the world's record for throwing the 16 pound hammer—distance 187 feet 4 inches—three feet farther than Flanagan's old world's mark.

Fielding Poorer Than Usual: General Decline in League: Whitey Tops 2d Basemen

By Dick Jemison.

Since the third week in the season, the last time the individual fielding averages were compiled, there have been several changes in the ranking of the players at their respective position, the classiest players at the different positions coming to their natural place in the front.

Although there are several players with a clean record in the outfield, they have not played in the majority of the games, and the honors go to Curtis Elston, the Chattanooga right fielder. Jud Daley, of Nashville, is right behind him.

Clayton Perry, the Nashville infielder, leads the third baseman of the league with an average of .961. Smith, of Atlanta, is in the runner-up position.

Kid Elberfeld, the Chattanooga manager, tops the shortstops, though the palm ought no doubt be awarded to Lindsey, of Nashville, who has played in twenty-six more games and whose fielding average is only 4 points lower.

Whitey Alperman, the Atlanta field captain, tops the keystone guardians with a fine average of .967. Ate is tied with him, but he has played in only half the number of games.

Abstein, of Memphis, and Kutina, of New Orleans, are tied for the lead among the first sackers with a percentage of .986.

Four catchers—Seabough and Snell, of Memphis; Gribbens, of Montgomery, and Schmidt, of Mobile, are tied for the lead among the catchers with a percentage of .987.

There are several pitchers who have as yet got an unsullied fielding record.

WILLIAMSON HEADS CAROLINA BANKERS

Asheville, N. C., July 12—With the election of officers and action on a number of important reports, the North Carolina Bankers' association, which has been in session at Lake Toxaway yesterday and today, adjourned late this afternoon. Invitations from several cities were received, asking for the 1914 convention, but this question was left to the executive committee.

Reigh Williamson, of Darlington, S. C., was elected president of the association; Charles J. Shanno, of Camden, S. C., was elected vice president; Leo G. Holleman, of Anderson, S. C., was re-elected secretary and treasurer.

Addresses were made by Charles Hall Davis, of Petersburg, Va., and W. B. Stevenson, of Cheraw, S. C. Both the addresses were well received. The association went on record as favoring the erection of the proposed barrier against the boll weevil. The association also went on record as favoring the establishment of

COTTON SLIGHTLY HIGHER AT CLOSE

Market Was Very Quiet in the Morning—Advances Followed by Reactions, Resulting From Realizing.

New York, July 12.—Trade buying of August and early new crop deliveries was about the only feature in a generally very quiet cotton market this morning. A consequent advance of about 3 to 7 points was followed by slight reactions as a result of scattered realizing for over the week-end, but the close was steady, net unchanged to 3 points higher.

Review of the new crop and the few private advices received during the morning, continued of a generally favorable average, with scattering complaints that high temperatures were checking growth, or of shedding as a result of drouth, about the only unsatisfactory features. It seemed, however, that the optimism was not sufficient to meet the requirement of trade buyers pending a free movement of the new crop.

Part of the day's buying was supposed to be based on this theory, and after opening 2 to 3 points higher the market ruled generally steady in the absence of fresh selling. Business was very quiet, many brokers having left town yesterday for over-Sunday, and trading may have been restricted to some extent, by the reported cables, as Liverpool was closed again today.

Weekly reviews of the Fall River market indicated increased sales from that point, and advices from the northwest reported a continued good demand for cotton textiles, owing to favorable crop situation and some of the buyers predicted that the census supply and distribution figures, due early next week, would show a sharp falling off in domestic mill stocks.

Cotton spot closed quiet; middling uplands, 12.30; middling gulf, 12.55; sales, none.

New Orleans Cotton.

New Orleans, July 12.—The week-end session in the cotton market was quiet, with only a narrow price movement. Weather and crop news was more than ever the feature of the market, but shorts covered over the week-end and their purchases were enough to give a very weak undertone. A feature of the day was the auction sale of 5,000 bales of cotton for the account of the shipped from San Benito, Texas to a local firm, were classed middling inch and one-eighth staple, and brought 16 cents a pound.

The market opened quiet, 2 points down to 1 point up, compared with the close of yesterday. Around the call, however, prominents went 2 points over yesterday's close but later fell off to the lowest levels again on the good weather reports. Demand for short covers was good around the middle of the morning and the market stood 2 points over yesterday's final figures. Late in the morning the market was dull and inclined to sag. The close was unchanged to 2 points lower.

The weather map indicated considerable rain in all but the eastern and western sections of the belt and the forecast promised little change in conditions over Sunday. This, and the weekly reports in Texas and Oklahoma of the new crop, against only rain up to the time last summarized, caused the impression that there was Dry Goods.

New York, July 12.—Cotton goods markets are quiet and steady with interest centering largely in the openings of many novel spring fabrics for the season of 1914. Jobbing is quiet, but are firm for spot delivery. Men's wear lines are being shown in a quiet way more freely. Jobbers report having had a good week

John F. Black & Co.

New York, July 12.—The weather and crop reports continue to be the factors which look as if the next condition report would be better than the last. The market is not greatly changed from the favorable news, however, and in the absence of any bear pressure holds steady. With Liverpool closed again today, the local market was dull and colorless. The close stands at an advance of 1 to 2 points o new crop months.

New York, July 12.—The extreme dullness was intensified by the holiday in Liverpool. Some little demand attended prices on limited trading, with the usual position well sustained. Dealings were very moderate, and such reports are unequal, with the eastern section better than average.

Texas, Fayette county, outlook for larger than last year, with bolls opening and the dry weather favoring the weevil, a generally unfavorable condition.

Foreign advices say spinners are conservative, with only moderate future buying. Stocks are moderate. Yarns sold ahead from 2 to 6 months and sufficient cotton for spinning till September.

EXCELLENT RAINS LOWERED GRAIN

Wheat, Corn and Oats Declined on Account of Rains. Wheat Closed Over 1 1-2c Lower—Corn 1-2c Off.

Chicago, July 12.—Wheat prices fell today to a lower level for July and September than had been reached before this season, due largely to excellent rains of advantage to the entire spring crop. The close, which was nearly at the bottom point, showed a loss of 1 3-8@1 1-2 to 1 7-8@2c net. Corn finished 1-2 to 3-4c down, oats off 1-2 to 7-8c and provisions a shade to a like advance.

General selling of wheat by longs bore down the market from the outset. Cables were lower and there was no evidence of export demand. About the only demand came from shorts who were taking profits. Hedging sales, due to a large run of winter wheat to market, had an increasing bearish effect in the last half of the day. Primary receipts for 24 hours amounted to 1,197,000 bushels, against 632,000 a year ago, making average daily receipts more than a million bushels as the principal terminals for the week. Seaboard clearances of wheat and flour today were only 133,000 bushels.

Heaviness in corn was rampantly bearish, as a result of the continued fine weather and the improved prospects for the growing crop. Owners unloaded on an extensive scale.

Oats broke with other grain. One house disposed of more than a million bushels.

Action in the provision pit had a see-saw character, because firmness in the hog market was offset with sympathy for the weakening of the cereals.

The companies reduced only 86,000 tons. During the first half of 1913 the pig iron production was 16,454,000 tons, a new high record for a half year, and during the last twelve consecutive months the total output has been 32,968 tons, exceeding all previous records for a similar year.

Railroad orders for equipment last week were insignificant, but inquiries came out for about 25,000 tons of rails, 15,000 tons for export. There also were some structural inquiries for Cuba and South America. Argentine asked for bids on a large dry dock. New York railroads probably will replace some rail orders, as mills are now booking.

Fabricating shops booked orders for scarcely 5,000 tons of structural material, a part of which for railroad work, the largest being for the Big Four shops and the New York and Long Branch bridge at Red Bank. The Smith and Hollenbeck publishing houses' contracts, calling for 3,500 and 2,000 tons of rails, respectively, have been received, and awards are expected soon.

Buying of pig iron is not developing as expected, and prices are still tend downward.

COTTON GOODOS

New York, July 12.—Buyers of cotton goods have been numerous in the markets. The trading has been along conservative lines and on a hand-to-mouth character, limited in part by general financial conditions and in some degree by delays in tariff legislation and by the feeling among trades that raw material values may decline. The jobbing trade, however, has

The scarcity of spot stocks continue to keep the market steady and sellers in position not even to be falling away in the ratio of curtailed production, due to labor conditions at mill centers. Prints, cloths and ginghams have been moderately active, printers, bleachers and converters showing a fair demand for new lines. Openings of fine and fancy cottons for spring have been numerous, the novelty effects set up to September 15 in leading mills. Denims remain firm. Duck trade is dull and unchanged and business generally firm. Drills and sheetings are in steady request for small lots and several of the larger mills are sold ahead for some time to come.

Cotton blankets and staple napped goods are in steady request. Export inquiries for shipment being ordered well for spring. The yarn markets are generally steady, but buyers have been of moderate proportions of late and orders attention is being paid to holding stocks down to fighting the output of mills. Prices rule as follows:

Print cloths, 28-inch, 64x64s, 3¾; 64x60s, 3¾; 38½-inch, 64x64s, 4¾; 64x60s, 4¼; 39-inch standards, 7¼ and 8; denims, 9 ounces, 14; drills, 8-ounce, 13¼; staple ginghams, 6¾; standard staple tickings, 9¼; ginghams, 9¼.

REVIEW OF THE WEEK IN AMERICAN MARKETS

COTTON.

New Orleans, July 12.—This was a tame week in the cotton market. The net change was a loss of 3 to 12 points. The range for the week was only 19 to 20 points. The high prices were made on Monday and the low prices on Tuesday. At the highest the trading months were 3 to 8 points over last week's close; at the lowest they were 12 to 16 under.

Trading was restricted to a considerable extent by the attitude against cotton trading in Washington and by the holidays in Liverpool Friday and Saturday. Sentiment appears to be about evenly divided, although good rains over a large part of the belt gave the bear side somewhat the advantage. Reports of irregular growth of plants, spotted cotton, the boll weevil and high temperatures were a help to the longs.

A feature of the week was the receipt of the first new bale. This came into sight Thursday and was a week later than the first bale last year. At the same time it was quickly followed by others, and it soon became apparent as the fact that only thirteen bales of new crop cotton came in during the week, against last year, whereas all indications pointed to a generous movement of new cotton during the early part of this month. Buyers appeared very slow to take up everything that came forward.

Spot cotton closed quiet, 25 points lower, declining closing at 12 7-16, against 12¾ last week and 13c this week last year. Sales on the spot and to arrive were 363 bales, last week 1,000 bales; 616 this week last year, sales to arrive amounted to 100 bales, against 475 last week and 372 this week last year.

FINANCIAL.

New York, July 12.—The dullness and sluggishness of the week's trading left room for no definite conclusions as to the course of speculative sentiment, which apparently remained largely in a tentative stage. The favorable inferences were negatively deduced from the absence of any serious selling and apparently damaging developments. "A liquidated market" was a phrase often heard. This best little instance of the week indicating the positive demand for securities.

Even the reported reinvestment demand kept pace with the average of transactions, which fell much under 200,000 shares, while on Friday the turnover was 84,000, a low record for seventeen years. Stock exchange members lament the poor showing of their firms and a review of the exchange sold for $38,000, a low record since 1908.

Lightened pressure of liquidation evidently is due to curtailment of new issues, such as lately have been thrust upon the market, necessitating the sale of seasoned issues to provide funds for subscriptions. The extent of this sale as evidently there has not been yet any effective accumulation of new capital to provide the means of fresh investment or offer any sustaining support for values of old. The week's sale of securities for foreign account, on an investment basis, allowing for bankers' compensation, compared with about $5,000,000 was a reminder of the position. So also was the fall in British consols to a price lower than for many years.

The sale of securities in the Paris bourse was equally significant, following upon the heels of the latest reports of money stringency caused by lending of the July settlement. The decline for the first time to below par of United States 2 per cents is complicated with the diminishing of foreign and its proposed treatment in the currency bill. The withdrawal of the Pittsburg bank failure as merely a sporadic condition, and was taken as evidence of the underlying confidence in the banking position. Much stress was organized also that the French demand for gold is due to the need for a commitment to the financing the Balkan combatants and the obstacles to financial combinations and mergers to be the future order.

The important statistical exhibits of the week passed almost unnoticed. United States Steel's decrease in unfilled orders was the falling off in June output and the continued halt in new steel orders confirmed the previous index of the stock market movement. Copper stocks were reduced only by a drastic cut in production. The unfavorable effect of the latter was offset by the fact that the prohibitions advanced to the interstate commerce commission to prohibit railroads from acquiring outside property supplemented the Union Pacific's dissolution as a lesson that directorships, combinations and mergers is to be the future order.

The week-end session of the stock market showed no improvement. Realizing sales were reduced only by a drastic cut in production. The unfavorable effect of the latter was offset by the fact that the prohibitions advanced to the interstate commerce commission to prohibit railroads from acquiring outside property supplemented the Union Pacific's dissolution as a lesson that directorships, combinations and mergers is to be the future order.

STEEL AND IRON

New York, July 12.—The restricting influence of the July holidays was again an important factor in the iron and steel industry last week. About half the furnaces which were shut down resumed, but a number are still out for repairs and the rest of the furnaces banked by the steel companies are again blowing, but more merchant furnaces are banked or blown out than since the beginning of the current month, output of rolled steel has been scarcely 75 per cent of capacity against 98 to 100 per cent in June.

New orders and specifications on contracts fell off even more than in June. The Steel Corporation subsidiaries booked orders in June at 1,000,000 tons, against 1,400,000 a total gain of 400,000 tons compared with May, but bookings were about 20,000 tons per day less than shipments. Since July 1 new business has been scarcely 40 per cent of the reduced shipments.

In June the steel companies reduced output of pig iron 97,000 tons, while the Steel Corporation increased its daily production.

The merchant furnaces reduced only 86,000 tons. During the first half of 1913 the pig iron production was 16,454,000 tons, a new high record for a half year, and during the last twelve consecutive months the total output has been 32,968 tons, exceeding all previous records for a similar year.

Railroad orders for equipment last week were insignificant, but inquiries came out for about 25,000 tons of rails, 15,000 tons for export. There also were some structural inquiries for Cuba and South America. Argentine asked for bids on a large dry dock. New York railroads probably will replace some rail orders, as mills are now booking.

Fabricating shops booked orders for scarcely 5,000 tons of structural material, a part of which for railroad work, the largest being for the Big Four shops and the New York and Long Branch bridge at Red Bank. The Smith and Hollenbeck publishing houses' contracts, calling for 3,500 and 2,000 tons of rails, respectively, have been received, and awards are expected soon.

Buying of pig iron is not developing as expected, and prices are still tend downward.

COTTON GOODOS

New York, July 12.—Buyers of cotton goods have been numerous in the markets. The trading has been along conservative lines and on a hand-to-mouth character, limited in part by general financial conditions and in some degree by delays in tariff legislation and by the feeling among trades that raw material values may decline. The jobbing trade, however, has

The scarcity of spot stocks continue to keep the market steady and sellers in position not even to be falling away in the ratio of curtailed production, due to labor conditions at mill centers. Prints, cloths and ginghams have been moderately active, printers, bleachers and converters showing a fair demand for new lines. Openings of fine and fancy cottons for spring have been numerous, the novelty effects set up to September 15 in leading mills. Denims remain firm. Duck trade is dull and unchanged and business generally firm. Drills and sheetings are in steady request for small lots and several of the larger mills are sold ahead for some time to come.

Cotton blankets and staple napped goods are in steady request. Export inquiries for shipment being ordered well for spring. The yarn markets are generally steady, but buyers have been of moderate proportions of late and orders attention is being paid to holding stocks down to fighting the output of mills. Prices rule as follows:

Print cloths, 28-inch, 64x64s, 3¾; 64x60s, 3¾; 38½-inch, 64x64s, 4¾; 64x60s, 4¼; 39-inch standards, 7¼ and 8; denims, 9 ounces, 14; tickings, 8-ounce, 13¼; staple ginghams, 6¾; standard staple tickings, 9¼; ginghams, 9¼.

New York, July 12.—The statement of the actual condition of clearing house banks and trust companies for the week shows that they hold $19,434,800 reserve in excess of legal requirements. This is a decrease of $849,400 from last week. The statement follows:

Actual condition:
Specie, $340,084,000; decrease, $4,522,000.
Legal tenders, $80,674,000; increase, $7,902,000.
Net deposits, $1,796,650,000; increase, $17,893,000.
Circulation, $46,482,000; decrease, $240,000.
Banks cash reserve in vault, $380,790,000.
Trust companies cash reserve in vault, $62,966,000.
Aggregate cash reserve, $439,756,000.

Trust companies reserve with clearing house members carrying 25 per cent cash reserve, $84,444,000.

Total deposits, $825,918,000; decrease, $9,697,700.

New York, July 12.—The Financier says this week:

"Considering renewed exports of gold on Paris account and the banking movement of money following the July dividend period, the clearing house banks of New York made a very good statement for the week ending July 5. The statement of the institution increased $10,319,000. The current week will show the fullest ever known on the stock exchange, so that the situation in this line was no one to other cause. It is to be noted that the loans of the trust companies, as reported in their statement, made independently of the clearing house, decreased $7,000,000, so that there has probably been some shifting of loans as between the banks proper and the trust companies.

"The bank has $4,388,000 in specie, but gained $7,262,000 in legal tender, the net result being increase of $2,880,000 in cash. Deposits exceeded $17,882,000, and this increased reserve requirements to an amount large enough to offset cash gains of the banks, therefore, decreased their cash reserve $541,400, the surplus above 25 per cent minimum standing at $19,414,800. The above figures are based on the report of actual condition, but the statement figured according to the basis of daily average, and showing earlier changes, makes the surplus reserve of the bank $18,400,650."

white satin and a cape of red satin. A novel feature is the use of suspender-like straps that are attached to the top of skirt on either side of back and front. These are made of the striped goods cut on the bias. Similar bands trim the sides of skirt to the slashes which are laced with red silk cord. The cape has a hood which may be worn over the head instead of the bathing cap. The cap here worn has a brim to protect the eyes. The middle figure is wearing a draped suit of waterproof faille, trimmed with fleur de soie having a white ground and a red flower. The surplice blouse has short kimono sleeves with turn-back cuffs. Loops and ends of the flowered goods are arranged at the left side. The trousers are shirred on cords and finished with narrow frills. They extend below the skirt

GIRL'S BODY EXHUMED FOR SECOND AUTOPSY

Wilkesbarre, Pa., July 12.—A second autopsy to determine the exact cause of death will be made on the body of Miss Alice Crispell, the 18-year-old daughter of a mountain farmer, and whose body was found in Harvey's lake near here last Sunday after the girl had been missing three days.

Meanwhile counsel for Herbert Dalrymple, acknowledged sweetheart of Miss Crispell, in jail awaiting the acting of the grand jury in connection with her death, is preparing to fight for his release through habeas corpus proceedings which will be reached next Wednesday. Counsel will base his argument on the fact that a coroner's jury has exonerated Johns.

Several clerks of a Wilkesbarre store today said that a girl resembling Miss Crispell appeared in the store as late as 9 o'clock on the night of July 5. They had examined a photograph of the girl. If their statement is verified it will unravel the entire case. The police are working on. Miss Crispell was last seen alive by her friends on the night of the fourth of July in the company of Johns.

The body of Miss Crispell was exhumed this afternoon and brought to the undertaking establishment. The autopsy will be performed Monday. The second autopsy is underta

ANDERSON SCORES TAX SYSTEM EVILS

Rank Discrimination Charged by Senate President in Calling for Action to Remedy State's Finances.

The speech of J. Randolph Anderson, president of the senate, delivered before the general assembly and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce last Thursday night, when the chamber entertained the legislature at a dinner, is a clarion call to the need of immediate action toward remedying the state's depleted financial condition.

President Anderson pointed out that while Georgia boasts herself as "the Empire State of the South," the figures upon her financial status which she is compelled to exhibit to the world will not bear her out in her claim. The fault lies, he declares, not with the lack of resources in this state, for there are many smaller states which show larger taxable values, but is due to a great extent to the rank discriminations in the present tax system.

He put the problem of a remedy squarely up to the present session of the general assembly.

President Anderson's Address.

Mr. Toastmaster and Gentlemen: I am sure I voice the sentiments of every member of the general assembly in saying that it gives us great pleasure to be here tonight as the guests of the leading business men of the greatest city of the greatest state of the south. I am a native born Georgian and my father's people have been so before me since her early Colonial days. I come from the city which was the mother of Georgia and from the county which was for a decade White Jollins a with you tonight in glorifying her present greatness we should not forget the proverb, "as the twig is bent the tree is inclined," and it may not be amiss for me to ask you to reflect a moment upon the early beginnings of our state and to note how the traits impressed upon them then are still manifest as characteristics of our people.

Because of the carelessness of the school historians the idea has become common that the colony of Georgia was a purely philanthropic movement designed to relieve the lot of a class of unfortunates who were imprisoned for debt. That idea is erroneous. Philanthropy was there, but it was not it was merely an incident to the main purposes which actuated and controlled the English government. General Oglethorpe, the originator and founder of the colony, was a great philanthropist, but he was also a great statesman and admittedly the foremost soldier of his day in England. For generations Spain had been the dominant world power.

Domination Challenged.

The rising fortunes of our mother country challenged this domination and from the days of the Great Armada these two powers had been almost continuously grappling in a life and death struggle for supremacy, as regards this western world England held the Atlantic seaboard from the Carolinas northward. Spain was strongly interested in Florida and held the West Indies and the whole of the great South American continent. Between these lay a debatable land in which both powers had outposts and to which both laid claim but with which nothing had been attempted, save the abortive English effort to establish the Margravate of Azilia to the south of the Savannah river. Spain had effectually crushed out all French attempts at colonies in Florida and was determined to wipe out the English colonies to the north.

The military instinct of Oglethorpe and the guiding genius of the English seized upon the opportunity to interpose a bulwark against Spanish aggression and the colony of Georgia was conceived and launched as the first and only distinctively military colony ever sent out by the English government. The intent is clearly shown in the charter. The first settlers were trained and drilled in arms before sailing. The town and township of Savannah were laid off with all the precision and regularity of a military camp. In the town open places or squares were provided to which outlying settlers could retreat and in which they could park their cattle and goods in case of necessity. These squares now constitute the numerous little parks which so beautify the city today, and the cattle to them still remains in the state. Lands were granted only to those capable of rendering military service. Rum and slaves were prohibited as being calculated to enervate the military qualities of the colonists. Forts were established on the Savannah and Ogeechee rivers. A band of hardy Scottish highlanders were established as a military settlement at New Inverness, now Darien, and Frederica on St. Simons island was built as a fortified town with all the male inhabitants serving as a garrison. All this was pushed to completion with feverish haste and within five years a small, but compact, military English colony existed between the Savannah and the Altamaha.

Clash Not Long Delayed.

The clash was not long delayed. A powerful Spanish army of over 5,000 men with a great fleet set sail from St. Augustine with orders to destroy all English colonies on the Atlantic coast. They landed on St. Simons island and there were met by Oglethorpe and his handful of troops. The Highlanders, through vanity unmeasured, were imbued with the spirit of their intrepid commander, who, before the battle, wrote, "We are resolved not to suffer defeat. We will rather die like Leonidas and his Spartans if we can but protect Georgia and the Carolinas and the liberties of the Americans from desolation." On July 7, 1742, was fought the battle of Bloody Marsh, the Spanish invasion was repulsed and driven back and on that day it was decreed that the language and civilization of this country should be English and not Spanish.

This military spirit of the colony gave to our people characteristics of order, discipline or conservatism and steadiness which persist to this day. Every town founded by the people of some of the states of this country are running after new gods and ideals in a few years, but Georgia, one of the most progressive of all, in all essentials to health and happiness, has not been swept off her feet by either agitation or impracticism, but has clung to her well-tried moorings and to her ancient faiths.

In this spirit we come today to grapple with the problems that confront us. So far as this general assembly is concerned the most urgent and most important question that faces us is the financial condition of Georgia. We all know that there is a serious deficit in our treasury. It is a situation with which I am quite familiar, and I believe I was the first to point out its existence and the need for taking steps to remedy it. Towards the close of the session of 1910 I was asked by the chairman of the senate appropriation committee who had the duties of the distinguished speaker of the house, to give him some information about the condition of the finances, which he was to use in a speech he wished to make in the senate. After the close of that session I gave out an interview publishing the substance of my remarks to him. I pointed out the existence of a deficit and calculated that by the year 1913 it would amount to $747,000.

My Views Assailed.

It may be remembered that my views and conclusions were bitterly assailed in the public press and that it finally resulted in an audit being had of the state's financial status. Today we realize the painful fact that my prediction was approximately correct. This deficit we know is not due to any lack of material resources in the state, but simply to the absolutely inadequate and insufficient methods we have under our laws for the ascertainment and collection of taxes. The state instead of being run on a business institution is practically an object of charity so far as its tax revenues are concerned.

We boast of being the Empire State of the South yet the figures we are compelled to exhibit to the world do not bear out our claim. This condition is injurious to the state and to our people in more ways than a failure to provide sufficient revenues to run the state and its institutions. The credit of mine in a county adjacent to this one attempted to affect arrangements in the north and east for securing money to lend out on Georgia real estate. His glowing description of the wealth and resources of Georgia were cut short by the simple reply: "Your figures may show you to be among the poorest of states. You have tax values of only about $50 millions, while much smaller states have values in excess of one billion, and states of approximately your size show values of two billions and upwards." In this way the present system is a serious injury to the state's credit, and this is a grave matter for us to consider especially at this time when we have to refund some three millions of the state debt. This same system is also a direct injury to the individual citizen. This fact I have mentioned had an application for a loan of $2,800 on a piece of property, which he considered was worth at least $6,000. He recommended the loan but was notified he had omitted to send on the tax valuation of the property. On looking this up he was horrified to find that it was returned at only $300. In the face of this sworn return the loan was declined.

Remedy for Tax Evil.

The evils, the injustice and the rank discriminations of the present system are now apparently recognized and admitted by every one. What is the remedy? To seek new sources of taxation will be adding only a drop in the bucket. Some new taxes may be wise, but they will only be palliative. They will not cure the ills we suffer from and on many of our people the tax burden is already felt to be a heavy one. In my judgment we need a revised most of all and first of all is a through-going revision of our whole taxing and financial system and the installation under the advice of expert accountants of a modern, up-to-date system of keeping the accounts of the state and of its fiscal officers, agents and institutions with adequate provision for proper periodic auditing. This is the foundation which must first be laid and after this is done then and not till then, can we wisely or safely say what our further needs may really require. The cornerstone of the whole business is and must be a proper and conservative method of tax equalization. Kansas is a poorer state than Georgia, yet in Kansas the tax values are over two billions. We have in reality more than that. If we see to it that our real values or even approximately our real values are put upon the books we could reduce our tax rate from five mills to two and one-half mills and yet receive a half a million more in revenues than we now get from our ad valorem taxes.

Problem For Assembly.

The problem is one which the present general assembly has to solve. We see our school teachers remaining unpaid much more than half the year is gone. We see our state institutions unable to keep pace with the needs which the growth of the state is imperatively demanding of them. We know that the boll weevil is crossing our borders, the greatest menace that has threatened our people since Sherman's army invaded us. Yet we have no money to take any adequate steps to protect our fields and our farmers from its ravages. The situation is one to make us hang our heads in shame that a great state—our state—should be brought so low, but I am not dismayed.

I know the men and the temper of this general assembly. They have come here to do business. They have learned that the root of our troubles is the lack of a proper system of tax equalization, and with the firmness and steadiness of our people they will go straight to the mark and will not rest until the work is done. I confidently expect that by another year Georgia can lift up her head again and say to her sister states, "I have put my house in order, who can boast of a fairer domain or can make a better showing now that I?"

OBEAR PROPOSES MOB RULE REMEDY

Former Adjutant General Suggests Changes by Which Machinery of Law Will Be Completed.

The report of the state military department has just been issued by Quartermaster General William G. Obear, formerly adjutant general, and a most comprehensive and formidable volume it is, composed of 500 or more pages.

Among other things the report recommends a definite policy for the state's militia, suggests how mob rule may be eliminated and gives an exhaustive report of the Augusta strike.

Regarding the elimination of mobs the report says:

"Those (at Augusta) and events of like nature lead to the opinion that if the people of this state sincerely desire to eradicate the mob evil from their midst they must, through their general assembly, provide the necessary machinery for so doing. It is believed that the recent act restricting the ordering out of troops solely to the governor and requiring him to first declare a state of insurrection in the affected district when troops are so ordered, is a long step in the right direction, but this should be followed by other statutes to make the machinery complete.

"As elsewhere indicated, authority is needed to suspend sheriffs who fail in their duty to direct a change of venue in cases where mob violence is likely to occur, and there should be organized a state police or constabulary similar to the Texas Rangers, the Pennsylvania constabulary and the Canadian mounted police, to act directly under the governor's orders, or through the military department, for the purposes of ferreting out and bringing to trial such cases of lawlessness as has existed in certain counties recently and which is liable to reoccur in the state at any time. The strength of this force should be elastic so that it might be reduced to a few men, or increased when circumstances demand.

Local Authorities Wanting.

"If the local authorities could be uniformly relied upon to do their whole duty in enforcing the law such a force might not be needed, but it is regrettable to state that in the very rare exception when local authorities are not found wanting in such cases due largely to political conditions. With such a law any governor who so desired could, with the use of the militia as a last resort (for which they were originally intended), effectually suppress the mob evil in the state."

Regarding a definite military policy General Obear says:

"From an experience of eighteen years with the military department of the state, and as the chief thereof for the past eighteen months, I am impressed with the need of a definite policy for this department in its dealing with the questions of recruiting, organizing and disciplining and drilling the militia, which should not be subject to the everchanging ideas of its different heads, but should be settled on broad lines after careful consideration by all those whose experience and study fits them for counsel, so that the efforts of all could be directed along well-defined channels for the continued betterment of the service.

Why Army Has Improved.

"The great improvement in the regular army in recent years is known to be due largely to that carefully selected body of officers which constitute the general staff corps, which plans and co-ordinates the work of all arms and departments, and it suggests that a similarly organized similar lines could do much the same class of work for the guard of this state. There is already sufficient authority of law for such a board, and should it be ordered it should consist of all the officials of the military department, the United States army officers on duty with the state, the commanding general of the guard, and a limited number of other officers whose experience and study fit them for such advisory duties, regardless of their rank."

Bankers' Letter Makes Public Rules for Cotton Shipment

An agreement reached by steamship companies and railroads east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio and Potomac rivers, upon rules regarding the shipment of cotton, is made public in a circular letter being sent out by the Georgia Bankers' association to people connected with the production of cotton or its by-products.

These regulations are directed at the delivery of cotton in the same condition as received by the common carriers, and are regarded as the instrument by which cotton shipping will be revolutionized.

Bankers' Circular.

To Farmers, Ginners, Cotton Seed Oil Mills, Cotton Exporters and Cotton Compresses:

Owing to the large and, it is alleged, unjust claims, which have been made against the steamship and railroad lines for damages to cotton, we would call your attention to the following resolutions, which were adopted at a meeting of the steamship and all railroad lines east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio and Potomac rivers, held on June 18 relative to the condition in which bales of cotton must be placed before a clean bill of lading will be issued, either by the railroads or the steamships, namely:

That effective on and after September 1, 1913, no railroad or steamship bill of lading will be issued without describing the actual condition of the bales of cotton received by them.

First. Not thoroughly covered.

Second. Covering insufficient to retain marks.

Third. More or less wet.

Fourth. More or less stained.

Fifth. More or less soiled.

Sixth. Bales of cotton tendered for shipment wet and subsequently allowed to dry out will be marked "Bales have been wet and dried."

Seventh. The standard size of gin boxes is to be 27x54 inches and an extra charge of $1 per bale on cotton will be made for ocean freight on all bales from boxes of greater length or width than the above size.

Eighth. The standard size bale 27x54 inches, in the basis of the contract agreement with ocean carriers, and each and every bale of cotton from gin boxes not exceeding 27x54 inches must, on delivery, contain a minimum density of 22 1-2 pounds to the cubic foot.

Any bale of these dimensions that does not show this density, if not repressed to the required density, shall pay extra freight of 50 cents per bale.

Ninth. Each and every bale of cotton must be durably and legibly marked or branded. Marks to be placed between bands so that no part of the mark will be covered by the band. No other mark allowed upon the bale except head brand (if any) and the mark under which the bale is moving for export. All other marks to be thoroughly obliterated so that no part of any old mark will remain.

Must Bear Marks.

Tenth. When the quality of the bagging is insufficient to carry the marks to destination a patch of good bagging or cloth should be put on the bale, under the bands, to bear the mark.

You will note by the above resolutions that it is the positive intention of all steamship and railroad agents to give the subject of cotton inspection, commencing September 1, 1913, very rigid attention. You will further note that should the cotton tendered for shipment bear any of the defects noted above, that either any or all of them will be so noted on the bill of lading. We desire to state that if the condition of the cotton justifies these notations on the bills of lading and they are so noted, that these notations will destroy the negotiability of these cotton bills of lading insofar as the banks are concerned and it will become impossible for the exporter or cotton buyer to draw through New York or other financial centers for the value of the cotton, when the bill of lading accompanying same bears any of the above enumerated notations or exceptions.

As the time is exceedingly short before the movement of the next crop, and as it is essential for all bills of lading to be relieved of any exceptions whatsoever, it is of grave import that you and all of you exert every effort within your power to see that all cotton in your territory conform to these rules and to bring them face to face with the seriousness of the situation and the necessity of seeing first, that the bale when ginned is the proper and standard size box and that it be kept at all times under cover and not subject to rain and other weather hazards; that sufficient bagging of good quality be used, and, in short, that the cotton, which is the most valuable of our products, be given the treatment that is required for its preservation and marketing.

Mother's Scribblings Tell Of Her Anxiety Over Child

A mother's grief is graphically told in hysterical scribblings on the margin of a police circular sent the Atlanta police from Springfield, Mass., where Mrs. Rose Thompson is searching for her kidnaped child.

The circular gives Bertillon measurements and identification marks of Ambrose W. Thompson, father of the abducted, for whom a search is being made by every police department in the nation, a pathetic letter accompanied the circular from the mother.

There are numerous paragraphs scribbled in the hand of the parent on the circular's margin.

One is:

"Please help me find my baby—he is too small to help himself."

Another is:

"Barbers, please watch for my husband. He must have his hair cut somewhere."

Others are:

"Vacationists to country or mountain, watch!"

"Traveling men, please carry a circular in your pocket and help spread the story!"

"The court gave him to me. He has been gone ten months and needs a mother's care and love."

"Everyone help by telling someone else!"

A picture of the child is sent with the circular. His name is Robert Wilson Thompson. It is a picture of a chubby-faced, fair-haired youngster with a childish smile on his features. More scribblings are on the photograph graphically pleading for the aid of every man to whose attention the case comes.

Mrs. Thompson lives in Round Hill, Ill. In her letter she tells of how she, an unsophisticated farm girl in Virginia, married her husband while he was near Richmond posing as a country missionary. It is a touching letter—so touching, in fact, that it has caused officials of the Atlanta police to make especial efforts to locate the husband and child.

The Well Dressed Woman

What Is New in Dress Accessories

By Marion Morris

IF a woman is meticulous about the little details of her toilette it is quite certain that she ranks among the well-dressed women of her community. And even if a woman is nationally omitted on this side of the ocean it is a great deal to dress one in a flawless way.

The accessories of dress should be of vital importance to the woman who cannot afford to get new gowns and suits every time fashion has a new idea, for the clever woman can keep up a modish appearance by simply altering the little things that seem the latest notes of the style dictator.

The Veil.

There is no accessory that is more important or that is more neglected than is the veil. On this side of the Atlantic one frequently hears that the veil is not fashionable this season because the hats are small, but the Nuita Parisienne does not agree with this opinion, because she knows that the well-groomed woman always wears a veil, whether her chapeau is small or large. As every woman knows that mesh veiling in the colorful, exquisite and lacy designs are in vogue. I shall tell about the unique veils that are newcomers.

"The Jewel" veil is really the Vanity style—a chenille mesh with a large embroidered black chenille vanity spot to be worn at the side of the mouth—with a large rhinestone mounted in the center of the black spot. Although a bit extreme, this veil is pretty appropriate for Summer wear.

"The Face Frame" veil is unique, but a rather difficult style. This veil is generally in a lacy weave with a large oval to cover the face of raveled or plain mesh, surrounded with an elaborately woven frame—covering veils of chiffon are made in the same way, but the contrast between the chiffon and the mesh veiling is too severe to be effective.

An Attractive Hat in White Crepe

The "Vojlette" is clever and chic although not very practical. By some women, it is called the "Bobby Veil" as it extends to below the nose and curves to the side, as does the visor of the English Bobby's helmet—this veil is a mesh weave, has a narrow scalloped edge in black, white or a contrasting color.

The "Reboux" veil is the unique idea of the Paris modiste whose name it bears. It is nothing more than a lace veil of generous length mounted on a ribbon that is run through a casing made of the top of the veil, that ties in a bow at the back of the crown; and it is finished in a similar way around the neck—the only difference is that the casing is set on a few inches from the edge to allow the border of the veil to form a neck ruche.

Speaking of lace veils, reminds me that in Paris black Chantilly lace veils are worn with leghorn hats.

Neckfixings.

The de Medici collar is the most ultra of the season, because it is beautiful and as it is too difficult to make it is not commonplace. However, it has been responsible for the de Medici ruche that is now the leading fashion in neckfixings. This ruche is merely a narrow pleating of lace or tulle inset around the V neck of a bodice and boned in the back to accentuate the de Medici idea. The effect of such a ruche can be easily attained by sewing a narrow pleating inside of one's coat collar; and then it matters not what kind of blouse one wears.

THE fichu in its original draped form that is so quaint is much worn, but as the modified fichu with narrow shoulder collar and tapering cluster tabs of tulle or lace that give the idea of a draping, is more becoming to the majority of women it is most favored. With either style one can make a dress or blouse look quite new.

As tailored skirts of white silk and fine linen are the correct mode for athletic and sever tailored wear, Fashion has decreed polka dotted four-in-hands to be worn with them when they have soft turnover collars. These gravats in blue or black with white dots are quite the coolest looking, but those in rich shades of gold, red and light green are smart, too.

Blouses.

As blouses are more frequently considered a part of the tailored suit than as an accessory, I shall briefly say that eyelet embroidered blouses are now the craze, as they hold the same unique position among modes for practical wear as blouses of frill and shadow lace do for dressy occasions. The latest advices from Paris say that these blouses will continue to be popular in the Autumn.

Shoes.

IF there is one accessory of dress that is more important than the others this season, it is footwear, because the new costumes have made the feet so conspicuous. The long pointed French slippers of patent leather that resemble Colonials, as they are worn with large buckles, are becoming a trifle passe—especially those with cut steel buckles, as the plain black enameled buckles reflect more refined taste.

High sandals are the latest fad of the Parisienne. These shoes, which are generally of black satin are designed with Louis XIV heels and in a pointed last, have very high tops, that are scalloped on both sides, tapering to about an inch width at the top in the back—at the point of each scallop there is an eyelet, so that they may be laced in the Greek fashion.

Patent leather shoes with biscuit color, light tan, pearl gray and white cloth tops continue to be Fashion's favorite of wear with tailored suits and trotteur dresses. This should not be surprising, for they give such a distinctive note to smart toilettes.

Hosiery.

MANY women have the mistaken idea that because shoes and stockings are so much in evidence with the new slashed skirt modes they should wear stockings that are nothing less than daring. Those thin light gray silks are positively vulgar, as they are so suggestive. Indeed, dash-color stockings would be less objectionable—and, as a matter of fact, these are very pretty and dainty with Summer frocks. However, black stockings with black shoes, and white with white, still remain the most refined.

Parasols.

Not in many seasons have sun shades enjoyed such a general vogue! Those in bright colors are particularly favored as they are mostly used to complete the artistic color harmonies of costumes. The parasols in Japanese and oct shapes are quite chic.

THE LAUNDRY QUESTION

Until one has tried it when planning for an extended trip where economy must be closely considered, it is scarcely realized the extent to which laundry bills may be cut down without personal discomfort. Gauze underwear should be worn, as it can be laundered in one's locking room. Take a little alcohol lamp, provided with a folding water vessel, some washing powder and a cake or two of soap expressly made to wash articles satisfactorily in cold water. Shirtwaists should be of wash silk, cotton crepe or light-weight wash flannel, and neckwear the kind that is easily laundered.

The Black and White Widow

The Eugenie Veil

A rather startling idea for mourning has just been evolved in Paris. This is the Eugenie veil of black net with a deep border of crepe. The front is gathered so that it fastens around the throat with a heavy crepe stock, which brings it down tightly over the face, while the ends fall in points.

For deep mourning it is worn over a small black crepe turban, but at the end of six months the widow becomes black and white, as it is then thrown over a hat of pure white crepe and worn with a white suit.

Mourning Novelties

CREPE FLOWERS A NEW IDEA

Mourning is no longer strictly conventional. All sorts of original ideas are being exploited by the Parisian milliners and their imitators in this country.

WHEN VISITING

Put into your suitcase or trunk a strong sash-curtain extension rod and several long hat pins. If space is limited, stretch this rod upon the book-supports of the closet. Hang waists and light skirts on this rod by passing the hatpin through one side of the collar band or skirt band, then over the rod, and through the other side.

The Amateur Dressmaker

Possibilities of Chiffon and Malines

WE'VE just had a wardrobe windfall. Father, ever on the alert for our benefit, bought a piece each of white chiffon and malines at a merchandise auction and for the past week we've been busy making the materials into accessories. It's been such fascinating employment that it seemed not a bit like sewing. Probably Providence intends all kinds of work to be like that—a real delight—and doubtless when any sort of labor seems irksome it's merely because there's something wrong with the worker. Anyhow, this time our fingers fairly ached to get at those sheer materials and I know that is why it seemed easy for us to fashion so many pretty things from them. All Summer Louise has been sighing for a gauzy blouse to wear with various skirts, and so, first of all, we cut off six yards of the chiffon and made it into a finely tucked waist closing in front between double frillings of malines. Its neck is finished with a nautical collar, overlapped in front by the points of a Robespierre collar which at the back rolls so narrowly that the shape of the neck is covered, and on the three-quarter sleeves are turned-back cuffs that point toward the elbow. The two collars and the cuffs are in malines embroidered by Mildred whose hand-needlework is exquisite—if I do say so myself.

SINCE Commencement Day Louise has been so very gay and has had to wear her graduating frock to so many little dances that its upper part was almost in rags, so we made a new blouse of tucked maline and belted it with a high girdle of rose silk, trimmed with malines. Then, to wear with a white crepe de chine skirt—all that remained of Mildred's first party dress—we made Louise a white chiffon tunic cut out across the shoulders in early Victorian style, but having long sleeves gathered at the wrist into frill-finished, tight-fitting cuffs. Where the tunic stops several inches above the knees, its edge is caught under against the skirt, and about the hips its fullness is held down by a deep girdle of the white crepe. It's going to be a useful little afternoon or informal evening frock. Half the girls of Louise's set are frankly talking about copying it in chiffon and whatever shades of crepe their mothers happen to have on hand. Louise didn't actually need another Summer hat, but having the materials in the house she covered a wire sailor frame with double layers of white chiffon, trimmed its crown with an inch wide band and a pump bow of malines and about the edge of its brim hung a biased inch band of the same transparency. Its effect is very fluffy and Frenchy and Summery-looking. She says that later on she shall cover the same frame with silk and make it do for one of her Autumn hats.

TO wear with her tailored linen and serge suits, Mildred made a most artistic waistcoat, formed of widths of malines—starting from the shoulder seams and running their entire length—that cross at the top of the bust and disappear under a high girdle of white silk that fastens in front with a row of tiny white crystal buttons. The neck of the waistcoat is finished with a malines Medici collar shaped into six sharp points, extended by fine writhing. On one of her last Summer's silk blouses Mildred put wide revers—this sort of revers are narrower at the top—of folded chiffon, edged with maline frills, and a ruche of the chiffon having a single sash of the malines whose appearance and forms a little fan above the waist line and whose hanging end, falling to the sleeve in front, is heavily embroidered. Her frock is gray and so the white accessories are pretty with it, but had it been of a decided color, only a black bodice trimming and sash would have been smart. She also repaired an old evening dress and brought it up to date by turning its worn sleeves and bodice into a high girdle and building up the decolletage with strips of pearl-embroidered malines and folds of chiffon. And as she won't go with her arms wholly uncovered she caught a three-yard strip of malines just in front of the left arm-pit, carried it loosely backward, catching some of its folds to the shoulder and allowing the rest to fall toward the elbow, brought the other end over the top of the right arm and let both loose ends fall at either side of the figure. This treatment gives the effect of both a scarf and angel sleeves and it adds greatly to the dignity of a young woman's appearance.

EVER since the day that father returned from a week-end visit at the home of a multi-millionaire business friend, he's implored Mildred and I to have some of "those loose, lacey gowns that the fashionable women wear at teatime and at home dinners." To have told father that one month's wardrobe allowance would scarcely buy the least costly of such gowns would have been brutal and we've always made him evasive replies, meanwhile hoping that he'd forget about them. When he showed us the two auctioned pieces, however, Mildred exclaimed: "Pretty soon, Daddy, you'll see us floating about the house in teagowns!" And while it may seem absurd for a woman who invariably superintends the putting on of dinner to step about the kitchen in what Ruth calls "apwarts dwess," father is pleased and so nothing else matters. Of course, Mildred and I used passe evening gowns for the foundation slips which we veiled with white chiffon and over which we put on chiffon coats. Mildred's coat floats over her train and gradually shortens toward the fronts which turn back at the neck into a square Medici collar of wired malines. Her wide sleeves are a trifle caught in above the wrist to form a sort of flowing cuff but my sleeves barely cover the elbows and are sewed into the armsyes of a-collarless three-quarter coat. Really, they furnished up teagowns look so pretty and are so comfortable, because corsets need not be worn under them, that I don't understand why more women of moderate means have not long ago adopted them for home evening use. I suspect also that a great many of my sister economists don't know how well chiffon washes and wears. Now how cheaply it may be purchased by the piece.

MY share of the malines thus far used up has furnished the trimming for what Louise frivolously terms my "bat-bonnet," a small, round hat enlarged by means of the finely plaited and firmly wired tulle frill standing upward and outward from the edge of its narrow black, velvet brim. When first tried on this hat, it seemed to me to be too extreme for a middle-aged matron but father likes it. He insists that I haven't changed since our marriage and he utterly refuses to see the gray hairs and the incipient wrinkles which I try to point out to him. In addition to the "war-bonnet," Mildred made for me a three yard covert chiffon scarf, edged with a narrow frilling in malines and covered an oblong parasol frame to match it. Then Louise hand-painted the ends of the scarf and bordered the sunshade with a design in mauve clematis. These three new accessories are lovely with any of my Summer costumes.

THIS first thing we made for Ruth was a malines hat with a low crown defined by a self roll, and a wide deppy brim all tiny frillings and at the left side weighted down with a huge pompon in chiffon. Under this hat which could be seen of Ruth's little face looked so sweet that Louise said she must have something specially to go with it and together we made a chiffon frock veiled with a full length malines coat. As this flimsy costume is for the child to wear to church and to Sunday school, we don't consider it an extravagance.

WAISTS FOR THE TRAVELER

Crepe de Chines are popular and practical, as they clean easily. The familiar double frill is still used, as is also narrow frills which outline the front pleats, or follow the side fastenings. They have the button through collar and cuffs, with long shoulder lines. Wash silks have broad or narrow stripes in purple, gray, blue, rose, yellow, brown. Then again any color may be found with a white stripe. All the silks are made in the mannish style. Unlined net and lace waists are also very practical, as they are easily laundered and cool.

TO MARK CLOTHING

To bring the letters up black, when making clothing with indelible ink press firmly against the chimney of a lighted lamp or gas globe for a moment. This will do when a hot flat iron is not convenient.

PRETTY BRASSIERE

A pretty brassiere is made of alternate strips of lace and beading, through which wide ribbon is threaded. Adjustable straps are used for evening wear.

A Cachet for the Petticoat

The question of petticoats is a most important one just now, for with the narrow skirts and the lacy underslips required by fashion, one wonders how a girl is to acquire even that semi clothed look that is rather expected of her, for her colored stockings will show at the knees, if she wears a lace petticoat and there is no room for her skirts—however, a band of ribbon about six or seven inches wide can be run on flat at the knees and will greatly add to the effect of her costume. Another wide ribbon may be worn straight around the bust under the arms and will bring out the lace brassiere on top of her princess slip, and in the uncorseted days, if the ribbon be boned slightly at front and back, may really be worn with a well made lace brassiere instead of a corset, if one be of the ultra slim figure that is now in vogue.

Veils for Summer

For the girl who has little color or whose skin loses some of its freshness during the hot day, the face veil of dotted design in single mesh, will be found intensely becoming if chosen in a deep tone of purple or dark blue. These shades seem to give a smooth look and also make the cheeks a bright pink, that not even the ever becoming black veil gives to hot weather.

Settling the Question of Outing Attire

"WHAT do you think, Ellen," Mabel exclaimed, as she ran up the steps of my apartment a few days after my little talk on the careful management of clothes. "Father has asked me to visit her for a week at her seashore cottage," she flew loosely, Mabel." I said, as I drew my arm through hers and we went in to my little library. "That is just what I thought the moment I opened the letter," Mabel rattled on, "but ten minutes later when I asked myself what shall I take down? I fretted I was really not as happy over the idea of this visit to the shore as I had at first imagined. So, here I am, to-night, to ask your valuable assistance as to what to get or what not to get." I smiled, for well I knew the moment I heard of the contemplated visit that my little friend had come to me for counsel.

"Well, to begin with, Mabel," I said as I gave the couch a little swing, "I hope you are not going to buy a whole wardrobe of new things before looking over what you already have on hand. You know it is always wise at each season of the year to look over old things before purchasing anything new —so the same with this visit to the shore—don't go ahead and buy a whole lot of new dresses, only to find later on that you could have done very well with one or two new frocks and your old dresses fixed over."

"THAT sounds practical enough, Ellen," Mabel responded, "but I don't think my old things are good enough for this visit. You know, Esther dresses so well, and always has such a lot of well-groomed women around her all the time that I feel I must have good-looking clothes."

"But, my dear," I went on, "don't think you always have to buy new clothes in order to have good-looking ones. Remember, too, that the girls you are going to meet at the shore have never seen your wardrobe before—you know a man can't tell last year's dress from this, provided it is becoming—so they won't be the wiser, whether you have just bought your dresses for the occasion or fixed over old frocks. A dress bought last Summer, with a few of this year's touches added, surely cannot look anything but stylish. Besides, if you spend all your evenings planning or making new gowns, by the time you reach Helen's cottage the sea air will feel more like a medicine to you than a real, true refreshing wave of Summer pleasure." "Perhaps you are right, Ellen," Mabel replied, "for last year when I went away I simply wore myself out planning and buying, up to almost the hour the train left. Surely, though, I will have to buy some new things?"

OF course you will, goosie," but do go about it carefully—and now to answer your first question as to what you will need for this visit, I should think for morning wear you would want two or three little frocks, a couple of white skirts and several shirtwaists. Get these in collarless design and with three-quarter sleeves, as they are more comfortable and look best for seashore wear. Then you will need two or three little afternoon dresses, but surely the ones you bought last year can be fixed up to look like new by merely adding one of the new collars or berthas, which are so attractive this Summer. Again, an old dress can be freshened up by means of a pretty new sash or one of the exquisite and dainty artificial flowers, which look so pretty when fastened at the waist line. Any little touches along these lines make an old dress look up-to-date in style and most attractive. Perhaps, too, by letting down the hem of one of your last year's frocks and facing it you may be able to drape the skirt at the front and sides in quite the latest fashion. By fixing over your old dresses in this way you will be able to keep most of your money toward purchasing one or two evening gowns and a cloak of some sort, or again you may need to get only one new dance frock if you freshen up your last year's one, along the lines I suggested before. You see, all this won't cost very much and how much happier you will be when the time comes than if you had bought a whole lot of new gowns. Often one don't need half as many things as one imagines, even when visiting at a wealthy girls' cottage.

"I wonder why you are always such a comfort, Ellen," Mabel said, as she picked a leaf off my Boston fern, "but how about my shoes and gloves? I know you always love dainty footwear, spotless gloves and pretty neck fixings."

THAT is right, Mabel, I do, for I believe that these little touches often go further than anything else in making a girl look well groomed. You will need at least three pairs of shoes, one for morning wear and two pairs for afternoon and evening wear, and if you can afford still another pair so much the better, but don't buy anything the price of which you will have to worry over while away. Short gloves, have as many pairs of either doeskin or chamois skin as your pocketbook will allow, and, of course, plenty of pretty neckwear. Two bats will be needed and perhaps a duck or canvas one for boating. Your last year's hat, the one you are wearing now, even if a little faded in color, is such a becoming shape, why don't you get a bottle of one of those colored fluids and freshen it up?

"Well, I guess I have told you all you will need in the way of clothes, except that a little cotton poplin dress would be very useful for damp rainy days. And speaking of rain, reminds me of the ocean and the almost priceless bathing suit. You can get such fascinating ones at low cost these days that it hardly pays to make one, and the caps this Summer are too bewitching for anything. So, there, my lady, I believe, you are figuratively fitted out for your visit, but as a last piece of advice I would suggest that you spend in bed the two days previous to your going away, thus giving yourself a nice little rest to help you the better enjoy your trip," and with this I tossed a pillow at my "troublesome" little friend.

Cousin Sue –

We got off the ship and out of the Customs House gracefully, because the officers caught only themselves, by trying to catch us. What they did not find, Deutschmeyer lost. Swiftie wanted air. I told him what to pull so something would blow in through the window. In came the conductor, who started a row and an investigation. Swiftie got fined and had to ride in the dog caboose.

PS In Hamburg next week.

Wishing you the same

THE IDEA FOR THIS NOVEL & PRACTICAL DESIGN WAS ORIGINATED BY "WINIFRED WORTH"

Pincushion Design for Embroidery Artists

IN MY study of embroidery I have learned that one reason why Madeira embroidery is flowerlike and fragile is because in the land of its creation about the only beautiful objects to delight the eyes of the women are flowers which grow in lovely profusion. These the women imitate in embroidery, often working by a single light or by the side of a humble open grate fire.

If you wish to make a good imitation of their lo ely work, I would suggest that you transfer this pattern to a very sheer white material. Work the leaves, and bowknots in solid embroidery, using a single thread. Make the long stems first, then the leaves. In making the leaves run the thread from the base to the tip, then be gin whipping leaf over and over slanting the stitches slightly.

The floral portions are made in eyelet. Use one hundred thread and a very fine needle to outline every petal and center. A sewing stitch is used, yet fine enough to hold the edges firm. With a pair of embroidery scissors slit the middle of each petal, turn the slit edges under and back with the needle. Whip the edges over and over the line made with the sewing thread. Stitches should be of one size, closely placed and deep enough to hold the edge. Sincerely yours,

Winifred Worth

TO TRANSFER THIS DESIGN.

Put some soap in a pint of hot water, stir and remove soap. Saturate Design with mixture, then remove excess moisture by partially drying Design. Place material on a hard, flat surface and lay the Design, face down, upon the material. Cover with two folds of newspaper, and with a tablespoon rub, pressing hard, until the Design is entirely transferred.

CARE OF THE SKIN

BY EDNA EGAN.

WHY have you "pimples," my dear maiden? Why is your skin "thick and dull"? Why sallow as a lemon or "with a blue tinge"?

I will tell you. Because, first, you have never taken proper care of your health and next because you have never learned to wash your face properly.

"Wash my face properly!" cried some girl who is famed for her neatness and deservedly so up to a point. "Why, I wash my face every day. Three times—six!"

Maybe so, but since your complexion is marred by some one of the defects which assail neglectful youth it is plain you have left something undone. You do not use good soap, perhaps, and very hot water, both of which are necessary to clean pores properly, for all local trouble begins with dirty pores. You neglect the useful steam bath, whose occasional use is absolutely necessary to invigorate and cleanse. You eat piles of candy instead of wholesome food and drink doctored sodas instead of the right quantities of pure water. You study too hard, neglect exercise, are unacquainted with the life-giving properties of fresh air.

The skin is like the stomach, it must be fed, washed, aired and put to bed, as it were, under restful conditions. Anything that disturbs the stomach will mar the complexion; anything good for the stomach is good for the skin of the face, for every inch of skin on the human body. So begin with a wholesome diet, regular exercise, baths and the rest necessary. It is far easier to pass mental examinations with a body poised by the right regiment than it is to cram the mind every month and stand up a bewildered and disfigured girl on the important day.

The most noble mind is affected by a disordered skin and a disordered skin is only another phrase for disordered habits.

As to nourishing foods, one girl may need one thing and one another, but chicken and rice, salads, fruit and milk are accepted beautifiers the world over. A daily diet of sweet, juicy oranges is superb, these acting directly upon the liver and often doing away with the need of laxatives. For the bowels must be kept free even if it is necessary sometimes to take a course of calomel or castor oil. Gentler laxatives, and ones that may be relied upon if used when necessary, are sarsaparilla, rhubarb, licorice and water, senna tea or figs and senna stewed together.

A pleasant, and girlish way, to take the licorice, is to buy it in stick form, crack it up and eat a good big chunk on going to bed. For those who like the toothsome root, this precaution for regular habits will assume the aspect of a genuine spree. Then there will always be a licorice bite for the hungry girl—sallow or pimply, too, perhaps from the same cause—who creeps into your college bedchamber with a plaint of starvation. Licorice is wonderfully filling, and you have always the pleasant thought that it is a form of dissipation which does not hurt.

ODDS AND ENDS

IN purchasing a piece of linen, if in doubt about the material being genuine, dampen a finger in the mouth, put it on the material and if the dampness shows on the opposite side at the same time, the goods is linen. Cotton fabrics are slower to absorb moistures. The rule is infallible.

SOILED wallpaper can be cleaned upon the walls without injuring the most delicate or highly colored. Dip a whitewash brush in hot vinegar and brush all over it very quickly, but thoroughly. You will be surprised to see how dirty the vinegar becomes. When dry the paper will be fresh and clean as if newly hung.

IF a bag made of outing flannel or any soft material be drawn over a broom and moistened thoroughly with kerosene, it will be found effective in caring for linoleum, painted or hardwood floors, etc. Although the odor my be an objection, it serves as a good disinfectant.

A DIRTY sink pipe or the waste pipe of a lavatory basin will often become clogged. In this case take a handful each of salt and soda, and, after mixing the two, put as much as possible down the pipe. Leave for about half an hour, then pour a couple of quarts of boiling water down the drain, following it with plenty of warm water, so as to remove every vestige of slime, soap or grease.

A HOUSEWIFE who turns off tasty little breakfast omelets has one that is her own invention. She cuts a quarter of a red pepper and a quarter of a green pepper into dice and mixes them and two or three tablespoonfuls of minced boiled ham with five slightly beaten eggs and then bakes it in the omelet pan as usual. For every egg she uses a tablespoonful of hot water in the mixture.

EVERY now and then, instead of allowing the carpet to remain in exactly the same position as first placed, the tread of the carpet should be moved a couple of inches or so either up or down. This has the effect of keeping the pile of the carpet in a uniform condition, and, besides, retaining the fresh appearance of the carpet, it helps it to last much longer than it would if left exactly as laid. It costs nothing to do this, yet saves much.

TO remove the smell of onions, wash the pan thoroughly in the usual way and wipe dry with a dishcloth. Next sprinkle with salt, set on the stove and allow it to brown, shaking the pan well from time to time. Rinse again in clean warm water, to which a lump of washing soda has been added, when all taste and smell of onion will have disappeared. To take out rusty screws, heat a poker red hot and hold it for a few moments to the head of the screw. Then use the proper sized screwdriver—to fit the slot of the screw—and it will come out quite easily and with little trouble.

THE best way to freshen home-made bread so that it is as good as new is to dip the loaf in cold water, put it in a pan and bake it until it is heated through. Then wrap it in a damp cloth and when cold it is as good as when first baked.

COURTEOUS CHILDREN

BY MRS. McCLURE.

A COURTEOUS gentleness to social inferiors, such as servants, is the sign manual of breeding. Therefore exact from the child a gentle deference for their feelings. He must be told to say "Please" when asking for a thing at table, told to say "Thank you" when it is given him. The men and women of the south are noted especially for marks of politeness and I am glad to be able to tell you that a deal of the training come through the need of being polite to one's black nurse. The deflection is not treated with spankings, for the black nurse has no right to spank. She only says, perhaps with the sorrowful dignity that is more biting than a dozen switches, "It seems terrible Ah got to be 'shamed of de chile Ah done bring up!"

It was the old black nurse of the south who taught imperative obedience to the father's and the mother's will, who inculcated love for them, who insisted upon every little shade of the ordinary behavior which stands for breeding. A good deal depends upon the character and bringing up of the nursemaid into whose hands a young child has been intrusted.

The primer for the general behavior of children contains rules so obvious that the average mother can only resent their repetition. Nevertheless, for a few who might care to freshen up their book let us touch upon them.

To talk in a child's presence of its gifts or looks is to pave the way for vanity and arrogance. The slightest impertinence to superiors should be promptly and firmly checked.

"But who are my child's superiors?" some one thinks, indignantly. I will tell you. They are his father and mother, his grandparents, his uncles and aunts, his teachers, all brothers, sisters and schoolmates who are older and wiser than himself. He must take off his hat to his elders, be they men or women or girls four years older than himself. He must never remain seated when an old person is standing or be other than helpful, willing and gracious with age.

It is no longer the fashion to say, "Yes, ma'am," when a mother or grandmother speaks, but the reply must still be as deferential. "Yes, mother," "Yes, grandmother," is the way the reply should be put; and when a lady is introduced her name should be respectfully repeated as the child gives his hand. Thus, "Mrs. Brown," this single utterance delivered with a mark of pleasure at making the lady's acquaintance.

No forward child should be allowed to claim the attention of visitors. After being introduced he should remain standing until asked to seat himself. If he enters the room without invitation for some reason which seems imperative, let him say at the door, "May I come in, mother?" and then stand quietly at her elbow until given permission to state his requirements.

SINKS

WOMEN slightly above the average height, who find that the ordinary kitchen sink is set so low that it causes them to bend at their dishwashing, vegetable cleaning, etc., will find a new and most practical article in the shops that will help them greatly and allow of their standing perfectly upright at sink work. This new convenience is a round and very strong stand made of heavy crossed wires and having wire feet. It is made to fit in the regular sized sink and also to perfectly fit the bottom of the ordinary round dish pan. It is set in the sink and the dish pan rests on it and in this way water is allowed to run free, a thing that cannot be when the pan sets flat in the sink. It saves wear on the dish pan bottom and is also useful to use on the kitchen table to receive hot kettles, pans, etc., that might burn the table.

COFFEE kettles should never be allowed to become dull and tarnished, as they are difficult to clean when much stained. A cut lemon, dipped in powdered bath brick, is however, usually successful in removing disfiguring marks, the kettle being then washed with warm soapy water, and a final polish given with the aid of a soft cloth and powdered bath brick.

FOR those who object to wire netting in the windows during the summer a new idea has been found to prevent flies and such annoying pests from entering the house. This new preventive is a window box of mignonette. It seems that the insects do not care to face the odor of this charming flower, so that it is an effectual barrier against their invasion. It sounds like a very pretty idea.

Fashions the Stage has Set

FOUR of the gowns shown here are worn in "Years of Discretion" and are extremely graceful. In the upper right-hand corner is a smart afternoon frock of all-over embroidery and lace, the peculiar mode of drapery is most artistic. Beneath is an evening coat of great elegance. This type of garment is called The Modesty Coat. An evening gown of great grace and beauty is displayed on the lower left-hand corner. It is made on long, rather loose lines, and is most becoming to large figures. A charming negligee is shown next. It is composed of lace and crepe de Chine, and is worn over an undergarment of sheerest batiste and lace.

The large figure displays a quaint little frock of green voile, with a tunic of rose satin. This gown is worn in one of the new musical comedies.
